COMRIE, SAINT FILLANS, AND MONZIEVAIRD.

COMRIE is a parish and village; the latter, respectable and populous, is 58 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 24 W. from Perth, and 6½ W. from Crieff; situated in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Lednock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. In the village the manufacture of woollens is carried on to a limited extent. There is a branch bank and a reading room, the latter well supplied with local and foreign papers, periodicals, &c. The beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood of Comrie and Saint Fillans attracts a considerable number of visitors during the summer. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a small Episcopal church are the places of worship. In the neighbourhood are presented some interesting and attractive objects; the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plains of Dalginross, several Druidical circles, and a monument of granite, seventy-two feet high, erected in 1815, to the memory of a late Lord Melville. There is also another memorial, formed of the same material, eighty feet high, to the memory of the late Sir David Baird. Five fairs are held in the year, namely, St. Kessac's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday in May, the 11th of July, the 8th of November, and the 4th of December. Comrie parish has an area of 60,593 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,858; of this number the village had 1,088.

MONZIEVAIRD parish includes the abrogated parish of STROWAN. Thus united, it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Monzie, by the former also on the west, by Muthill on the south, and by Crieff on the east. The river Earn passes through the district from west to east; and in the neighbourhood of this stream the country is beautiful, well planted and enclosed. There are several small lakes in the parish, among which Monzievaird lake, situated at the bottom of a wood, and well stored with pike, perch and eels, is a delightful object to passengers, and a great ornament to the pleasure grounds of Ochtertyre. On the bank of the lake a fine repeating echo is produced. There are some other seats of great beauty and taste, among which Lawers is the most distinguished. It was in this parish that the atrocious act of annihilation was all but carried into effect upon the clan Murray by the clan Drummond. The latter being the most powerful, collected the men, women and children of the Murray clan in the old parish church and set fire to it, when every soul was burned, save one, who leaped out of the window and was caught in the arms of one of the Drummonds, who, being more humane than the rest, saved the man's life. There are a church and public school in the parish. Acreage, 26,039. Population in 1881, 700.

SAINT FILLANS is a small hamlet in the parish of Comrie, 5½ miles from that village, pleasantly situated at the foot of Loch Earn, where boats are kept for the accommodation of fishing parties or other visitors who are attracted hither by the delightful scenery of this district. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church; and there is an excellent inn affording every accommodation to gentlemen during the fishing and shooting season. Population returned with the parish.

COUPAR-ANGUS,

WITH THE PARISH OF CARGILL AND THE VILLAGES OF BURRELTON, WOODSIDE, WOLF HILL, AND WASHINGTON

COUPAR-ANGUS is a neat market town in the parish of its name 15 miles N.W. from Dundee, 12¾ E. by N. from Perth, and 4¾ S.S.E. from Blairgowrie. It is a station on the Caledonian railway, and pleasantly situated on the Isla, a few miles above its junction with the Tay, on the main roads from Dundee to Blairgowrie and from Perth to Forfar. A branch of the Caledonian railway is now in operation from Coupar to Blairgowrie. A small stream, tributary to the Isla, divides the town into two parts; that portion which lies to the south of this rivulet is all that belongs to the county of Angus (or Forfar). In ancient times this place was the seat of an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Malcolm IV. in 1164, and endowed with considerable revenues by that monarch. At the Reformation this edifice, which was of considerable magnitude, was destroyed by a mob from Perth. The remains occupy part of the site of a Roman camp, said to have been formed by the army of Agricola in his seventh expedition. The town is compact and well built, and has the advantage of being lighted with gas, and within recent years considerable improvements have been made. The venerable steeple in Queen street is used as a clock tower. The street formerly called Abbey street is now Queen street, to perpetuate the remembrance of her Majesty's transit through Coupar-Angus in 1849. Considerable quantities of linen fabrics are manufactured here, the power loom factories adding much to the prosperity of the place. The Royal is the principal hotel. There are three banking establishments, viz., branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. A Town Hall, a substantial building in the Elizabethan style, from designs by Mr. James Smart, of Perth, was opened in August, 1887. The cost, about £3,500, was defrayed by public subscription. The public hall is 64 feet in length by 38 feet in breadth, and is capable of seating 600 persons; there are also reading and other rooms, a commissioners' hall, &c. The sanitary condition of the town is very good, a new drainage system having been introduced in 1885 and completed in 1887, at a cost of about £4,500. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. Its municipal affairs are administered by a board of nine police commissioners, of whom the chief commissioner is ex-officio a justice of peace for the county. A sheriff small debt court is held on the Monday after the second Saturday in January, April, July and October. The parochial board is the local authority for sanitary affairs, and under their auspices the town is now plentifully supplied with good water from the estate of Pitcur, about two miles south from Coupar-Angus, the supply having previously been very unsatisfactory.

The old parish church was an ancient building, and was so far decayed as to necessitate its being taken down. A larger and more elaborate edifice, in the Gothic style, has been erected on the site. The church has a large graveyard around it, in which are several old tombs and monuments; this edifice stands in Forfarshire. There are a Free church and four other places of worship not connected with the Establishment. A new public school was erected in 1876, with accommodation for upwards of 500 scholars. The parish of Coupar-Angus extends five miles along the east bank of the river Isla, varying from one to two miles in breadth; the surface, arable and meadow land, is well cultivated and enclosed. Though called Coupar-Angus, there is in reality but a small portion of the town or parish in the county of Forfar or Angus. The village of WASHINGTON is situated in the southern part of the parish. There is a market for grain every Thursday. Fairs: the third Thursday in March for horses and cattle; for horses, sheep and cattle, fortnightly; and a feeing market for servants on the Thursday after November 22nd. Coupar-Angus parish embraces an area of 4,699 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,816, of which the town contained 2,154.

CARGILL is a parish and village situated in the vale of Strathmore, the latter about 5 miles S.W. from Coupar-Angus, and is a station on the Caledonian railway. The extent of the parish from east to west is about six miles, and from north to south about four miles, bounded on the south by Collace and Saint Martins, on the west by the river Tay, on the north by Caputh and Coupar-Angus, and on the east by Coupar-Angus and Kettins. The rivers Tay and Isla join in the parish. WOLFHILL is a hamlet in this parish. The church is a plain but substantial edifice, erected in 1883, and there is also a public school. Cargill parish, which is purely agricultural, the soil varying from a heavy clay to a light sandy loam, embraces an area of 9,495 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,348.

WOODSIDE and BURRELTON are villages lying close together in the parish of Cargill, on the road from Coupar-Angus to Perth, distant 2 to 3 miles N.E. from the former place. There is a station on the Caledonian railway, a Free church at Woodside, and a public school at Burrelton.

CRIEFF,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONZIE, FOWLIS WESTER, AND MADDERTY, AND THE VILLAGES OF HARRIETFIELD, GILMERTON, BUCHANTY, LOGIEALMOND, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a parish, market town, and burgh, under the General Police (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is 22 miles N. from Stirling, 17 w. from Perth, and 6½ E. from Comrie, situated in Upper Strathearn, one of the most delightful districts in Scotland, on the southern declivity of a hill near the Grampians, having the Earn and several streams at the bottom, backed by hillls, crags, and the Knock of Crieff, all of considerable altitude—the outports of the ancient Grampians and the bulwarks of Scottish independence. Upper Strathearn occupies the mouth of an important pass at the Sma' Glen where the Romans had a station, and where tradition lays the bones of Ossian, and points to a fragment of his displaced tombstone. It proceeds into the highlands of Perthshire, having a wild mountainous region on the one side and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town, deriving no small advantage from the resort in the summer months of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation. During the past few years a great improvement has been made by the erection of commodious villas for the accommodation of the better class of summer visitors. Crieff has for a century been lauded as the Montpelier of Scotland, and its salubrity of air and beauty of scenery go far to entitle it to this appellation. The healthiness of the locality is attested by the returns of the Registrar, which show that the mortality of the parish is lower than in any even of the rural districts of Scotland. As regards railway communication, Crieff is connected with the railway system of the country by the Crieff Junction and by the Perth, Methven and Crieff Railway, being branches of the Caledonian line. It is favoured, too, in being the seat of educational establishments of the first order. Among these are Morrison's Academy, endowed by the late Thomas Morrison, builder, Edinburgh, who bequeathed about £20,000 for this purpose. Out of this sum his trustees purchased the site on which the academy is erected. It is intended to give a complete education to the sons and daughters of the middle classes—the departments being separate. It is conducted by a rector and staff of assistants, and has attracted pupils from all parts of the kingdom. A new wing has been erected at the east end of the school buildings, for the rector and for the accommodation of boarders. Taylor's Institution was foundedand endowed by William Taylor, of Cornton, who died in 1881, and left his whole fortune "for educating the children of the poor in the most useful branches of education, and for the formation of a suitable library, with lectures on such branches of science as may interest the community at large, and tend to elevate their intellectual character and promote their temporal happiness." For these purposes a suitable building, with a house for the master, has been erected at the east end of the town. In 1867 the Strathearn Hydropathic Establishment was erected, at a cost of nearly £30,000. It occupies a splendid site in front of the Knock, and overlooks an extensive landscape of rich varied beauty. Water of the finest quality is supplied at the rate of 20,000 gallons per day. The internal arrangements for the comfort and convenience of the visitors are admirable, and the success of the institution, under the able management of Dr. Meikle, has exceeded expectation. There is accommodation for about 250 visitors.

The Old Drummond Arms, in which Prince Charles Edward Stuart passed a night in 1745, was feued by the trustees of the late Lady Willoughby d'Eresby to the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and premises for the bank and a large hotel have been erected. The buildings are among the most handsome in the town, and add greatly to the appearance of the principal square in which they are erected. In the town are six branch banks and a Savings Bank, and two newspapers are published here—the Strathearn Herald and the Crieff Journal. A sheriff's small debt court is held quarterly, on the first Saturday in February, May, August and November. The places of worship are St. Michael's and West Parish churches, a Free church, and others for United Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics and Baptists. The weekly market is held on Tuesday, and fairs are held on the first Tuesday in each month. The parish of Crieff contains 20,385 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 4,852.

The parish of MONZIE, which is about 3 miles N.E. of Crieff, lies on the south side of the Grampians. It is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable, the remainder being heath and moss. It is watered by the Almond, the Keltie and the Shaggy, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building, and there is also a Board school. Acreage, 21,487; population in 1881, 753.

FOWLIS WESTER is a large parish in the district of Strathearn, and lying north-east of Crieff. GILMERTON and BUCHANTY are villages in this parish. Acreage, 22,803, population in 1881, 1,112.

LOGIEALMOND is a village in the parish of Moneydie, situated 6 miles N.W. from Perth.

MADDERTY is a small parish about 5 miles E. from Crieff. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Here are an Established church, a Free church, and a public school. Acreage, 4,861; population in 1881, 527.

DOUNE, DEANSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DOUNE is a respectable and thriving village in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 31½ S.W. from Perth, 19 S. from Crieff, 9 N.W. from Stirling, 8 S.E. from Callender, 4 N. from Thornhill, and the same distance W. from Dunblane. There is a station here on the Dunblane, Doune and Callander branch of the Caledonian railway. The town occupies a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists principally of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, but this business has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is carried on; and there are established in Doune branches of the United Bank of Scotland, Limited, and Royal Bank of Scotland.

In 1823 a new parish church with a handsome tower was erected, in the Gothic style of architecture. The interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice. For this much needed work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, formerly the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stand in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith. To judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, the castle appears to have belonged to that first-class order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling and Dumbarton afford entire specimens. There still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are forty feet high and ten feet thick, with a tower which rises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility. This building has during the last few years been partially restored by the Earl of Moray, the hereditary keeper thereof. A considerable portion has been roofed in, and part of the interior, notably the baronial hall, has been restored to its original condition. The outer walls and battlements have also been repaired so as to show the original structure and extent of the edifice. The whole restoration involved an outlay of several thousand pounds. The old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the castle was erected by Robert Spital, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune as tailor to Princess Margaret of England, widow of James IV. This bridge was widened by three feet in 1866. The Princess Margaret was a frequent inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots is said also to have resided some time in it.

In 1867 a hand-some Free church was built to replace one erected in 1843. There is also a church belonging to the Episcopal body, and about midway between Doune and Deanston there is a place of worship in connection with the United Presbyterian body. In October, 1875, was opened a new Roman Catholic chapel, built at a cost of about £3,300, which will seat 300 worshippers. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produces abundant crops of every description of grain. From the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which form the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. A short distance from Doune is the small village of DEANSTON, mainly supported by the cotton manufactures before mentioned. Fairs are held in Doune on the second Wednesday in May, the last Wednesday in July, the first Tuesday and Wednesday and the fourth Wednesday in November. The acreage of the parish of Kilmadock is 24,521, and the population in 1881 numbered 3,012, Doune containing 996 of that number.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE DUNBLANE, DOUNE AND CALLANDER BRANCH OF THE CALEDONIAN LINE.

Station, at DOUNE—John Bruce, station master

DUNBLANE,

A BURGH by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, is a small ancient city, in the parish of its name. It is the capital of the western district of Perthshire, and lies 41 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 33 N.E. from Glasgow, 28 S.W. from Perth, 11 from Callander, and 4 from Doune, charmingly situated on the banks of the river Allan, which flows through a great part of the parish, and affords excellent sport to the angler, there being a good supply of trout, besides salmon and grilse in their season. Dunblane is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Hon. Capt. Arthur H. Drummond, of Cromlix, in the vicinity of the town. This spring has been acquired by the Dunblane Hydropathic Company, Limited, who are proprietors of a large establishment capable of accomodating 200 visitors. The Scottish Central section of the Caledonian railway passes through and has a station in the town, and the Dunblane, Doune, and Callander branch commences here. Dunblane was formerly the see of a bishop, founded by David I., and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the Cathedral, the choir of which is now the parish church, all the other parts of the edifice being in a state of decay. It is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple of modern erection, one hundred and twenty feet in height, standing on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town. The town adjoining the church, from its being composed chiefly of old, dignified-looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the "Close," or the precincts of the cathedral. The good and learned Leighton, whose fame is in all the churches, was at one time Bishop of Dunblane, and bequeathed his valuable library to the clergy of the diocese. The books are kept in a suitable building called the Leighton Library, to which the public have access on easy terms.

Dunblane is a place of limited trade, and not conspicuous as one of manufactures. Worsted spinning is carried on very extensively by Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co. at their mills, Springbank, which give employment to a great number of the inhabitants. There is also a small mill for the manufacture of woollen cloth, and others for wool spinning in the parish, and a few of the inhabitants are employed in hand-loom weaving. In the High street are branches of the Bank of Scotland and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute and other functionaries. A sheriff court for the recovery of small debts and for ordinary business is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally. The court house and prison are modern buildings, convenient for their respective purposes. The places of worship are the parish church (before noticed), a Free church, a United Presbyterian, a handsome Episcopal church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are three public schools, and one belonging to the Episcopal church. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations.

The ride from Dunblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for the purpose of pasture, the dairy produce of this district being in high repute. At the lower end of the town is the romantic walk of Kippenross, near to the end of which is a plane tree, supposed to be the largest in Scotland, the circumference of the trunk in the smallest part being nearly twenty feet, where the branches separate fully twenty-seven feet, and close to the ground forty-two feet seven inches. The height of the tree is a hundred feet, and has attained the age, it is said, of over four hundred and seventy years. About half way between Dunblane and the Bridge of Allan is Keir House, the residence of Archibald Stirling, Esq. The grounds are laid out with great taste, and contain fine specimens of forest trees and ornamental flower gardens. They are kindly thrown open to visitors from two to six on Friday. On the river Allan, about two miles north of Dunblane, is the recently erected small village of ASHFIELD, where are situated extensive works belonging to the well-known firm of Messrs. Robert Pullar & Co. calico printers, &c.

A few miles from the town is Sheriffmuir, on which a severe conflict took place in November, 1715, between the royal forces, under the Duke of Argyle, and the rebel army, commanded by the Earl of Mar. Here on the summit of the hill are some large stones enclosed by iron rails, said to be placed where the standard was erected. Prince Charles arrived in Dunblane on the 11th of September, 1745, on his way to the low country, and remained a night at the house of the Laird of Balhaldie. The room in which the prince held his levee, on the morning of his departure, is courteously shown to the inquiring visitor. Dunblane bestows the title of viscount on the Duke of Leeds. There was formerly a market held here and numerous fairs, but they have all fallen into disuse. Dunblane parish has an area of 18 543 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 3,123, of which the town numbered 2,186.

POST OFFICE, DUNBLANE, Margaret Dawson, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from all parts at 7 30 a.m., and from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Stirling and the North at 2 30 and 6 15 p.m., and are despatched to the North at 6 30 a.m., to Edinburgh and Glasgow at 11 30 a.m., to Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the South at 4 20 p.m., to the North and the South at 5 30 p.m., and to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Stirling and the South at 7 45 and 10 p.m.,——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

DUNKELD,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CAPUTH, DOWALLY AND LITTLE DUNKELD, AND THE VILLAGES OF BIRNAM, BUTTERSTONE DALGUISE, DRUMOUR, GILLYBURN, MEIKLEOUR, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, SPITTALFIELD, INVER, STRATHBRAAN, AND TORWOOD.

DUNKELD is a small but interesting and handsome town and burgh of barony, partly in the united parishes of Dunkeld and Dowally, and partly in that of Caputh; 57 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh (by rail 60), 24 E. from Kenmore, 15 N.N.W. from Perth, and 12 W. from Blairgowrie; delightfully situated in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the Highlands and Lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the Culdees is noticed as early as 729, and is recorded to have been built by Constantine, third King of the Picts. David I., in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see whose name appears prominently in history is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312. He built the choir, succeeding bishops adding other portions until it was finished in 1460. It is stated that in 1560 it was destroyed and left a ruin by an order from the Privy Council of Scotland. In 1762 the Government gave £300 towards the restoration of the choir, and a further sum of £1,000 in 1815, to which the Duke of Athole added £5,000, for the purpose of converting it into a parish church. The other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation. In the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was occupied by the learned Gavin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, must highly interest the contemplative stranger. There is also a Free church, a neat and substantial edifice, erected in 1874, on the site of the old one, with tower and spire, which cost upwards of £2,0 0. The interior is ornamented by a handsome stained glass window, in memory of the Earl of Dalhousie, the whole of the funds being raised by public subscription. The scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skilfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athole, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats to be found in Scotland, and which has long been the resort of tourists and visitors. Excellent accommodation is furnished by two very extensive and superior hotels, the Duke of Athole's Arms and the Royal Hotel. The Bridge of Tay at this place is a magnificent structure of seven arches, the total span of which is 685 feet, its breadth 27 feet, and its greatest height from the foundation 54 feet. Its erection was commenced in 1805, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000, £5,000 of which was contributed by Government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public spirited nobleman. The bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and the river afterwards turned to flow through its finely formed arches. The view from this bridge is, in every direction, remarkably fine. Near the town is a seat of the noble family of Athole, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure grounds, and the lovely scenery, are most attractive objects; among these Ossian's Hall, the Rumbling Bridge, and several falls of the river Bran, are pointed out to the visitor. In these grounds are two very fine trees called "the mother larches," being the first grown in Britain. They were planted in 1737, and are 100 feet high, one of them measuring 15 feet in circumference at three feet from the ground. A very handsome fountain was erected in 1866 by the inhabitants and a few friends, as a mark of respect and esteem to George Augustus Frederick John, sixth Duke of Athole, who died in 1864. The manufacture of linen goods was formerly the staple trade of Dunkeld, but has now become extinct. There are branches of two banking establishments settled here, namely, the Bank of Scotland and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and as such is governed by a baron bailie, who is appointed by the Duke of Athole. A justice of peace court is held for the recovery of sums not exceeding £5, and for granting publicans' certificates, game dealers' licences, &c. James VI. made a grant for erecting a grammar school, called the Royal School of Dunkeld, which still exists. There is also a school for the education of females, a handsome building situated in the Market place, erected by the Duchess of Athole in 1853, at a cost of £1,200. The City Hall, in Athole street, is a neat stone building, furnished with a gallery, and capable of accommodating 850 persons. The funds were raised by the assistance of the present Duke of Athole, the gentry in the neighbourhood, and the inhabitants. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the 14th of February, and the 5th of April; should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fairs take place on the following Tuesday; another is held on the second Tuesday in November. Population in 1881, 768.

CAPUTH is an extensive parish and small village, 5 miles E. from Dunkeld, lying on the banks of the river Tay. Here is an Established church. BUTTERSTONE, SPITTALFIELD, and MEIKLEOUR are small villages in this parish, from 3 to 5½ miles distant. Acreage of parish, 19,489. Population in 1881, 2,096.

DOWALLY is a large parish, united with that of Dunkeld, situated about 5 miles N. from Dunkeld. The present church was built in 1818, nearly on the site of that erected by Bishop Brown. A number of old stones have been made use of in constructing the new building, amongst which is one bearing the arms of Bishop Brown, the original founder, a tombstone to the memory of one of the Dalguise family, and a stone in the shape of a bell. KINDALLACHAN is a small village in this parish. Acreage of the joint parishes, 9,456. Population in 1881, 791.

LITTLE DUNKELD, contrary to its distinctive appellative, is an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld above described. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into our districts. BIRNAM, DALGUISE, GILLYBURN, INVER, MEIKLE TROCHRY, MURTHLY, DRUMOUR, STRATHBRAAN and TORWOOD are small villages in the parish of Little Dunkeld, situate from one to six miles distant. The first district is that of MURTHLY, extending from Kinclaven to the "Pass of Birnam." It includes the villages of GILLYBURN and MURTHLY, where there is a station on the Highland railway. The Perth District Asylum, adjoining the station, is a fine square building, surrounded by beautiful grounds, which are kept in order by the patients. The grand features of this part of the parish are the extensive and exquisite grounds of Murthly Castle, the seat of the Stewarts of Grandtully, a fine structure in the Elizabethan style of architecture, the grounds being upwards of three square miles in extent. They contain avenues and terraces of the finest and rarest trees in the country. Besides Murthly Castle, this district contains Birnam Hall, the favourite autumn country seat of Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., who rents the shootings and fishings in the neighbourhood, and Rohallion, one of the most romantically-situated mansions in Perthshire. The soil of this district (all of which belongs to Sir A. Douglas Stewart, Bart., of Grandtully), is fertile and well cultivated; the surface of the country is beautifully varied, and the fields well enclosed. The second and central district of the parish is BIRNAM, in the midst of which Birnam Hill, rendered classic by Shakspere in the drama, and by Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., in art, rises in rude magnificence from the edge of the river. From the summit of Birnam Hill an unrivalled view is obtained in every direction, and its slate quarries have been wrought with profit from an early period. At the base of the hill are situated the villages of TORWOOD and BIRNAM, while about a mile to the west is the village of INVER, the birthplace of the famous Scottish musician, Neil Gow, pleasantly situated at the confluence of the rivers Tay and Braan. Acreage of the parish, 41,268. Population in 1881, 2,175.

BIRNAM is a beautiful modern village, about three-quarters of a mile distant from Dunkeld. For its size it is very imposing, and the houses produce a pleasing and artistic effect from their architectural pretensions and regular appearance. Dunkeld station of the Highland railway is situated in Birnam. The Birnam Hotel, of which Mr. John B. Pople is the proprietor, is the principal building. It is in the Saxon-Gothic style, with towers, and has an ecclesiastical and imposing effect. It contains a public hall—perhaps one of the finest in the kingdom, and is surrounded with fine pleasure-grounds. The Episcopal church (St. Mary's) is a handsome building in the Gothic style of architecture, with tower and bell. One of the features of Birnam is the new Institute, which includes a well-equipped reading room and library, recreation and refreshment rooms, public hall, and other accommodation. The Institute grounds enhance the amenity of the village, being neatly kept and furnished with seats under the shade of spreading beeches. Altogether the village of Birnam, with its excellent supply of water and gas and efficient system of drainage, added to the purity and salubrity of its atmosphere, presents an air of cleanliness, comfort and style that is not surpassed by any other in the country. In the immediate vicinity of Birnam there are a number of handsome mansions, conspicuous among which are St. Mary's Tower, the residence of the Duke of Rutland; and Erigmore, the seat of C. B. Logan, Esq., W.S., Edinburgh. Birnam is the centre of some of the most charming walks and drives in Perthshire, and is a favourite summer health resort. The third district of the parish of Little Dunkeld extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay, to Grandtully, a space of ten miles; here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. It includes a stretch of fine country called "The Bishopric," and contains the village of DALGUISE, where there is a station of the Highland railway, and near which are the mansions of Dalguise House and Kinnaird. BALNAGUARD is a village with a comfortable inn at the extreme end of the district. The fourth district is STRATHBRAAN, a valley about nine miles in length, through which flows the river Braan. In the lower portion the soil is fertile and well tilled, but the upper portion is poor and unproductive. Drumour is the autumn residence of Mr. Barclay Field, whose shootings extend over a vast expanse of moor and mountain. Near the centre of Strathbraan is the village of TROCHRY, containing a neat Free church and the ruins of a famous old castle, once a seat of the Earls of Gowrie. At the upper extremity of the parish lies the village of AMULREE. The parish of Little Dunkeld is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness, and by the Highland railway which intersects the parish throughout its entire length, about 14 miles. The population of the village in 1881 was 471.

DUNNING,

FORTEVIOT, FORGANDENNY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNNING is a rather extensive parish, containing a neat village of its name, the latter 9 miles S.W. from Perth, and 5 E. from Auchterarder; situate near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochil range of hills, and about 2 miles from the river Earn. The village, of which the Right Hon. Lord Rollo, of Duncrub Park, is the superior, contains a number of good houses. The places of worship are Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and one for the Episcopalians. The steeple of the parish church is of very ancient date, and is supposed to be of Pictish origin. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established in the village. This place was destroyed by fire by the Earl of Mar's army, on the retreat from Sheriffmuir to Perth. A thorn, planted at that time in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size and appearance at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded that at the conflagration of the village only one house escaped (which is still standing), and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner, a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw and any refuse of flax on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that, believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. A corn market is held every Wednesday. The Scottish Central Section of the Caledonian railway has a station about two miles from the village. The parish comprises 14,855 acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 1,635.

FORTEVIOT is a parish, 3 miles E. from Dunning and 7 W. from Perth, in the district of Strathearn and the greater portion in the vale of Earn, the river of that name passing through it. The middle portion is beautifully wooded and enclosed, and is intersected by the May, which joins the Earn nearly opposite Dupplin Castle. The village of Forteviot, which is situated on the right bank of the last-named stream, is an ancient capital of the Pictish kingdom, but nothing now remains to mark a royal seat. At Bankhead, near Dupplin Castle, an ancient cross may be seen, and one also on the opposite height of Dronochy both of which are supposed to mark the approaches to Hally Hill, where, in the time of Charles I., vestiges of a palace were in existence. It was on the heights here the battle of Dupplin was fought. The river May before-mentioned winds through the verdant knolls of the Ochils, and thence through the picturesque grounds of Invermay, flowing on and forming several beautiful falls, until it becomes lost for a time in the intricate course of the Hummel Bummel, a cataract at Muckersie Linn, that tumbles for more than thirty feet in a perpendicular fall into a romantic glen. About three hundred yards from the village is a station belonging to the Scottish Central Railway. The parish, which has an acreage of 7,785, contains an Established church and a Board school, and in 1881 had a population of 618.

FORGANDENNY is a parish and a village, the latter about 4 miles S. from Perth, 5 E. from Dunning, and 3 W. from Bridge of Earn. The village is very small, and the parish contains Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches, and two Board schools. There is a station on the Caledonian line, about one mile distant. Acreage, 8,946; population in 1881, 627.

ERROL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD, SAINT MADOES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ERROL is a parish in the Carse of Gowrie, 5½ miles in length and nearly 3 in breadth, stretching across the Carse from the foot of the hills to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile, and under most productive tillage; it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called "pows," collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district receives the name of Errol, signifying an eastern landmark, from the circumstance of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly at Luncarty, received for their services from the king a gift of as much land in the Carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. Be this account correct, or merely a traditionary legend, it is certain that the noble family of Hay take the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish. The small village named after it is 10 miles east from Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth; and about a mile from the village is a station on the Caledonian Railway. The village is gas-lighted. The parish church is a very handsome building, on a commanding site, the tower of which may be seen at a considerable distance; there is also a substantial and capacious Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. In the parish are the brick and pottery works of Mr. John Govan, and at Pitfour, 5 miles distant, are the brick and tile works of Messrs. Robert Small & Co. Acreage of the parish, 9,507; population in 1881, 2,421. ABERNYTE, INCHTURE, KILSPINDIE, KINNAIRD and ST. MADOES are all parishes in the Carse of Gowrie, and varying in distance from 5 to 9 miles from Perth.

FORTINGAL,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF KINLOCH-RANNOCH AND KELTNEY BURN.

FORTINGAL is a parish in the district of Breadalbane. The village, a small one, is 84 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 42 N.W. from Perth, 15½ N.N.E. from Killin, 5½ S.W. from Dull, and 5 W. from Kenmore, situated on the left bank of the river Lyon, about three miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilchonan, it extends 37 miles in length, by 17 in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the north-west part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers, and woods ; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about 11 miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. A yew tree in the burial ground is said to be upwards of 2,500 years old. There are the remains of a Roman camp on the Haugh of Fortingal. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks called GEORGETOWN. In this district rises the Schehallion, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, where Dr. Maskelyne, astronomer royal, some years ago made his observations on the powers of attraction. This parish is so wild and mountainous that prior to the year 1745 the civil power could not reach it. It was the receptacle of the freebooters, who laid the country under that species of contribution so well known by the name of "blackmail." The inhabitants are now steady and industrious. The small villages of KINLOCH-RANNOCH and KELTNEY BURN are also in this parish. In the former has been erected by subscription a handsome granite monument to the memory of the Gælic poet, Dugald Buchanan ; and at the latter place is a mill extensively engaged in the manufacture of tweeds, clan tartans, &c. Fairs are held in the village of Fortingal in December, and in the village of Kinloch-Rannoch on the second Tuesday in August and last Tuesday of October. Acreage of Fortingal parish, 196,683 : population in 1881, 1,689.

KENMORE,

WITH THE VILLIAGE OF ACHARN.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake of Loch Tay, which is sixteen miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake, which seldom or never freeze, abound with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk and white cottages, occupies an eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where its opens into a river, over which is thrown a handsome bridge of five arches. The village is 80 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.W. from Perth, 24 W. from Dunkeld, 16 N.E. from Killin, and 5 E. from Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the seat of the Marquis of Breadalbane. The mansion some years since was much enlarged and improved, and it now ranks amongst the most elegant modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This is a favourite point in a tour of the Highlands, hence is much visted in summer. The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful; amongst the former is the majestic mountain, Ben Lawers, which rises on the north-east side of the loch to the height of 3,945 feet. The places of worship are the Established, Free and Episcopal churches. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March and on the 2nd of November (both old style), and the 28th of June, the 26th July, the 17th of September, and the 24th December. The parish contains an area of 67,196 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,508.

ACHARN is a small village in Kenmore parish, situated about 2 miles S.W. from the village of Kenmore, on the east side of Loch Tay. Near the village, in a woody glen, are the celebrated Falls of Acharn. The Breadalbane family have built a grotto (called the "Hermitage") opposite to the greatest fall, where the water suddenly precipitates itself over the projecting rock a distance of about 250 feet.

KILLIN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CLIFTON, CRIANLARICH, AND TYNDRUM.

KILLIN is a mountainous and extensive parish in the Highland district of Breadalbane; the village, a rapidly growing one, is 74 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 40 N.N.W. from Stirling, 27 W. by N. from Crieff, 22¼ N. from Callander, 16 S.W. from Kenmore, and 8 from Lochearnhead, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart with the waters of the lake. The Callander and Oban branch of the Caledonian railway is connected by the new Killin line, by which Kenmore is brought into nearer contact through the Loch Tay steamers. This line is one of the finest in Scotland for grandeur of scenery. Anglers residing at the hotels have trout fishing free of charge in Loch Tay, which is one of the largest and most beautiful lochs in Scotland, and in point of salmon fishing, the season for which opens on 5th February, it is surpassed by none. Auchmore House, a fine seat of the Marquis of Breadalbane, is situated at the head of the loch on the south side, and opposite, on the north side, is the very old picturesque burying ground and mausoleum of the family. The ivy-covered ruins of Finlarig Castle, one of the oldest seats of the Barons of Breadalbane, are close to the vault. The largest vine in the British Isles is to be seen at Auchmore gardens. It is a black Hamburg, covers 475 square yards of glass, and grows from a single stem which measures 22 inches at a height of 3 feet from the ground. The falls of Lochy are about 3 miles from Killin, and are well worth a visit. The scenery from Killin to Kenmore can be seen to best advantage from the deck of one of the Loch Tay steamers. The west, or Killin end, is grand and wild, the mountains rising to a great height, and serrated into many jagged and fantastic sky-lines. Some rare ferns and cairngorm stones are found here. About midway down the loch, Ben Lawers, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, throws up its giant form, offering to the botanist a storehouse of most interesting alpine plants, and to the mountaineer a glorious prospect from the summit on a clear day. Towards the Kenmore end the scenery is of a different nature and very beautiful. On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the M'Nab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which, severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence in the neighbourhood of Killin is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed Highland hero Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favourable point of tour of the central Highlands. Besides Killin, there is another village in the western part of the parish, called CLIFTON. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-east side of the lake; and in passing down its bank it is worth while to stop a little at a woody glen, where the family of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, the 5th and 12th of May, the Friday before Doune first of November fair, and the first Tuesday in November (old style). Acreage of Killin parish, 96,926; population in 1881, 1,277.

CRIANLARICH and TYNDRUM are stations on the Callander and Oban railway, and each contain an excellent hotel.

KINCARDINE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TULLIALLAN AND CULROSS.

KINCARDINE (or Kincardine-on-Forth) is a seaport town and burgh of barony, in the parish of TULLIALLAN, 32 miles S. from Perth, 15 W. from North Queensferry, 10 W. from Dunfermline, 6 W. from Torryburn, and 5 N. from Alloa; situated in the southern detached part of the county, on the north bank of the Firth of Forth. At one time this place was called West Pans, from the salt works established in it, but these have long ceased to exist. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here, and there are rope and twine and worsted and woollen manufactories. There is a commodious harbour and an excellent quay, which, together with the good anchorage ground on the Forth, render this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of all burthens. The town, although irregularly built and the streets narrow, contains some good houses. Of late years the trade has considerably decreased. The church erected some years ago, is a very handsome and ornamental structure; the other places of worship are a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. The old church remains standing in the burial ground, and is an interesting ruin, the steeple, however, being perfect. The principal seat in the district is Tulliallan Castle from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in July (old style). The parish of Tulliallan contains 3,586 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,307; the town of Kincardine numbering 1,985.

CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh in the parish of its name, 4 miles S.E. from Kincardine, situated partly on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. An extensive traffic in salt and coal was at one time carried on here, and one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads. The Earl of Dundonald erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naptha and volatile salt from coal, but the speculation proving unproductive it was abandoned. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI. in 1588; it has a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and councillors. It unites with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline, under the style of the Stirling burghs, in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is the Right Hon. Henry Campbell Bannerman. The town and its vicinity possess many objects of antiquity. In 1217 a monastery was founded on the rising ground behind the town by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a tower in the centre; the latter is still entire, as is also a part of the church, which is now used for public service. In a recess of a mausoleum, erected in 1642 in honour of Sir George Bruce, are recumbent figures of Sir George and his lady, in beautiful white marble, and along a low settle are arranged their eight children in a kneeling posture. To the west of the town, on the bank of the Forth, is the ruin of Dunmarle (the castle near the sea), an ancient stronghold of the Macduffs, and according to tradition the scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children. The present house of Dunmarle is a handsome modern edifice, which owes its striking castellated appearance to the late Mrs. Sharp Erskine, who also erected in the grounds a beautiful mortuary chapel, within which she is interred. There is a museum in the house, wherein are some beautiful paintings, rare old china and other articles of virtu, to which, and the extensive grounds, the public are admitted on certain days of the week. Near the abbey church is a school, endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., at which twenty children receive free education. The building having become too small, the late Miss Davidson, of the Park, erected another school, at a cost of £1,500, and presented it to the trustees. There is also a public school within the burgh. The acreage of Culross parish is 7,584, and its population in 1881 was 1,130, the burgh containing 380 of this number.

KIRKMICHAEL,

WITH BALLINTUIM AND SPITTAL OF GLENSHEE.

KIRKMICHAEL is an extensive parish in the north-eastern corner of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north and the county of Forfar on the east. The parish, which is seventeen miles in length, and from six to seven in breadth, comprises the greater part of Strathardle, and is intersected by the river Ardle, which is crossed by a bridge of two arches, and along the left bank of which an excellent road leads from Pitlochry to Blairgowrie. Ardle Grave, near Dirnanean, nine feet in length, has been reverently preserved, and handed down to posterity, favouring the supposition that this part of the country was inhabited by a race of Fingalians. From the Druidical remains in the parish, it is supposed that Strathardle was the residence of an arch-druid; of these relics the principal are a rocking stone near Dalrulzion, a supposed Druidical altar near Balvarran, and numerous circles and cairns. A military way from Coupar-Angus to Fort George traverses the northern part of the parish, by the Spittal of Glenshee. In the Strathardle portion of the parish stands the village and kirk, 72 miles N. from Edinburgh, 29 N. from Perth, 12½ E. from Pitlochry, and 13 N.W. from Blairgowrie. There are Established and Free churches, and a constabulary station in the village. The acreage of Kirkmichael parish is 57,288; and the population in 1881 was 849.

SPITTAL OF GLENSHEE is a scattered district in the parish of Kirkmichael, 14 miles N. from the latter place, and 20 N. from Blairgowrie. There is an Established church here. At CRAY, in this district, are a handsome Free church and school.

BALLINTUIM is a small village in the parish of Kirkmichael. It is three miles east from Kirkmichael, and 11 miles N. from Blairgowrie. The scenery around is very charming and interesting. There is a public school in the village.

MEIGLE AND ALYTH JUNCTION.

MEIGLE is a parish in the district of Strathmore—the village, or small town, an ancient one, and the seat of a presbytery, is 61 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. by E. from Perth, 13½ N.N.W. from Dundee, 9 S.S.W. from Kirriemuir, 7½ W. from Glamis, 5 E. from Coupar-Angus, and 4 S. from Alyth; pleasantly situated on the banks of the Isla, and about a mile from Alyth Junction, on the North-eastern section of the Caledonian railway. A branch from Alyth Junction to Alyth passes close to Meigle village, and has a station here. The parish, 4½ miles in length and 2 in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and, besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the country, particularly Belmont Castle, on the estate of that name, the property of the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman, M.P., the gardens and fine plantations of which render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumulus, where, it is said, the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and monuments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in the vicinity. A new parish church has been erected on the site of the old one (which was destroyed by fire in March, 1869), at a cost of about £2,500. It was opened for public worship in July, 1870. In the churchyard are some very old monuments, which tradition asserts to be the grave of Queen Vanora, the unfaithful wife of King Arthur. The figures which, it is said, once delineated the history of Vanora, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile N.E. of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean are the remains of a Roman camp, called Cardean or Caerdean, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. There is a good hotel, viz., the Kinloch Arms, which offers excellent accommodation to visitors, with fishing on the Dean and Isla free. A cattle market is held on the second Saturday in every month, and fairs on the last Wednesday in June, and on the last Wednesday in October. Acreage of the parish, 3,980; population in 1881, 696.

POST OFFICE, MEIGLE, Donald Mackenzie, Post Master.—Letters from the North, South, and all parts arrive at 7 a.m., and 3 45 and 7 p.m. and from Perth and the South at 9 a.m., and are despatched to Aberdeen and the North at 7 15 a.m. and 10 p.m., and to Perth and the South at 2 15 and 5 30 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

METHVEN,

ALMOND BANK, GLENALMOND, TIBBERMUIR, AND ABERDALGIE.

METHVEN is a very neat village and parish, the former 6 miles W. from Perth, situated on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant 11 miles. It possesses a good subscription library. There is also an Agricultural Society, who hold two meetings annually. The Perth, Crieff and Methven railway terminates here. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded in 1433, for a provost and seven prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the youngest sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle, the residence of William Smythe, Esq., distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. But perhaps the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated Bessie Bell and Mary Gray, whose beauty and seclusion from the world are the subject of an admired Scottish melody. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Fairs are held on the Monday preceding Amulree market in May, and the fourth Thursday in October. Acreage of the parish, 12,911; population in 1881, 1,910, the village numbering 761.

ALMOND BANK is a village in Methven parish, situated about 4 miles N.W. from Perth, and is a station on the Perth, Methven and Crieff line of railway. There is a public school in the village, which in 1881 contained a population of 492 persons.

Trinity College, GLENALMOND, on the banks of the Almond is 10 miles from Perth and 4 from the Methven Railway station. It was projected in 1841, and opened in 1847, being founded for the double purpose of supplying a proper collegiate training to candidates for holy orders in the Scottish Episcopal church, and of establishing in Scotland a public school, after the general model of those in England. The theological college has since been removed to Edinburgh. The site on which the college stands was presented by the late George Patten, Esq., of the Cairnies. The funds for the buildings were raised by general subscription throughout England and Scotland. Among the most munificent benefactors were the Duke of Buccleuch, the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, the first warden of the college. The chapel, a building in the decorated style of Gothic architecture, 136 feet long by 52 wide, with a height of 70 feet, was erected at a cost of more than £8,000, at the sole expense of the Right Rev. C.Wordsworth. The council consists of sixteen members, namely, the seven Scotch bishops, two presbyters, and seven laymen. The resident masters are a warden, seven assistant masters, and a medical officer; music is taught by the organist.

TIBBERMUIR (or Tibbermore) is a parish and a manufacturing district, having within it the extensive bleach fields of Messrs. Lumsden & Mackenzie. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI. was confined by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators in the year 1582. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquis of Montrose and the Covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the covenanting forces were totally routed. Acreage, 6,140; population in 1881, 1,888.

ABERDALGIE, a parish, is washed on the south by the Earn, which here affords excellent fishing. The parish abounds in freestone, and much of the land is under plantation. Dupplin Castle, a seat of the Earl of Kinnoull, is in the parish. Acreage, 4,165; population in 1881, 297.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRACO AND GREENLOANING.

MUTHILL is an extensive parish lying on the borders of the Highland district, on the right bank of the Earn. The village is 19 miles N. from Stirling, 16 W. from Perth, and 3 S. from Crieff; and is situate on the great military road from Dunblane to Inverness by Tummel Bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the family of Perth, now the residence of Baroness Willoughby de Eresby; it is finely seated on a rock at the head of the vale of Strathearn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands. There is a church, in ruins, said to have been built in 1419; the tower appears to be of an earlier date, and is doubtless of Pictish origin. In the village a church was erected in 1828. In the churchyard there is a fine monument erected to the memory of the Rev. William Halley, the first Presbyterian minister of the parish. A Free church and an Episcopalian church are the other places of worship, and connected with the churches are schools and a joint library. The Crieff Junction Railway passes through the parish, and has a station a mile and a half from the village. The principal objects of interest in the parish, particularly to an antiquary, are two Roman camps, one at Strageath, and the other at Ardoch, a parish constituted in 1857, six miles from Muthill, the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards, by one hundred and twenty-five within the lines; the "general's quarter," which is a regular square of twenty yards each side, rises above the level of the camp, and contains the foundation of a house ten yards by seven. There are two other encampments adjoining, which have a communication with each other. Many years ago, various interesting relics were brought to light from beneath these ancient fortifications, such as Roman spears, helmets, fragments of bridles, and other articles; these lay at the house of Ardoch for a considerable period, but were all carried off by some soldiers in the Duke of Argyll's army after the battle of Sheriffmuir in 1715, and could never be recovered. Muthill parish embraces an area of 21,916 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,702. Acreage of Ardoch parish, 21,127; population in 1881, 1,102.

BRACO is a village in the parish of Ardoch, 6 miles S.W. distant from Muthill. It contains an Established and a Free church, and a public school.

GREENLOANING is a small village, also in the parish of Ardoch, 5 miles S.S.W. from Muthill. It is a station on the Scottish Central section of the Caledonian line, and contains a United Presbyterian church and a public school.

PERTH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KINFAUNS AND KINNOULL, AND THE VILLAGES OF CRAIGEND AND GLENCARSE.

PERTH, an ancient city, a royal burgh, seat of a synod and presbytery, and capital of the county to which it gives its name, is 46 miles N. from Edinburgh, 62 N.E. from Glasgow, 22 S.W. from Dundee, 15 S. from Dunkeld and 16 S. from Blairgowrie. The city is situated at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded by picturesque hills, having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians; and bounded on the north and south by two beautiful meadows, called the North and South Inches, the former containing one hundred acres, and the latter seventy-two; both ornamented with noble trees, and watered by the Tay, which occasionally overflows them. These Inches are devoted to the use and recreation of the inhabitants. The Tay is one of the finest rivers in the kingdom, and is celebrated for its picturesque scenery during its whole course, and for the value of its salmon fisheries. It is recorded that when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice, Ecce Tiber, Ecce Campus Martius!—"Behold the Tiber! Behold the Field of Mars!" Agricola pitched his tent in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. At one time the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but now handsome buildings have been erected on part of the space so occupied. Perth for a long period held the rank of capital of Scotland, was the residence of its kings and principal nobles, and the seat of its parliaments. It appears that it also bore the name of St. Johnstoun, from its ancient church dedicated to St. John. At the early period when Scotch kings succeeded to the Pictish throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint, and consequently obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognised by that name in any of the public documents of the period. Fordun, in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writings that the town of St. John, now called Perth, was priorily Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indiscriminately, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived; indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Peirt or Peart. The approach to Perth by the Edinburgh road is very picturesque, and the descent to the South Inch terminates in a fine avenue of trees, extending to the town. At the southern extremity of this avenue stands the general prison for Scotland, built by Government in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war. It was wholly re-built and remodelled in 1842; it is now occupied as a convict prison, and more extensive buildings erected for the purpose. The city itself is large and well built; the principal streets are long, well paved, and gas-lighted. At the east end of Marshall place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands a fine architectural ornament, the water reservoir designed by Dr. Anderson, formerly rector of the Academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence; he also devised the scheme for the supply of pure water. In all wells sunk within or near the town the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanliness; the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this, Dr. Anderson devised the plan of excavating a filtering bed, 300 feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Friarton Island, which, having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secretes only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element, pure, soft, and limpid at all times and seasons; this is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe, of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two steam engines, each of ten horse power. The project has been so successful that works upon the same priciple have been carried into effect in Berlin and Paris. The expense of this work is defrayed by an assessment or water rate on real rents above a certain amount. From the increase of inhabitants, the extension of the royalty, and numerous villas having been erected in the vicinity, a new Water Act has received the sanction of Parliament and is now in full operation. By this Act the present system has been extended to all parts of the city and suburbs, affording to the comunity an unlimited supply of pure water. At the public baths every description of bath may be used at a very low charge. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose terrace; in the centre are erected the Public Seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose terrace is a handsome range of houses called Athole crescent. The range of villas on St. Leonard's bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is very pleasing. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King street and King's place, Kinnoull street, Athole street, Charlotte place, and Barossa place, have arisen within forty years. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge which crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner. Its original narrowness admitted of a footpath on one side only, but in 1871 it was widened at a cost of over £2,000, by the addition of cast-iron footways, with Caithness pavement and balustrades. This bridge is reckoned one of Smeaton's most successful works. More recently many old buildings on the west bank of the river have been demolished, and a new street called Tay street has been formed, extending from the bridge southward to the Dundee railway bridge. Many buildings have already been erected in this street, including a new savings bank, a Free church, an elegant building, with a spire; the Victoria Buildings, which include offices where the Government officials are located, and others. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the suburb of Bridgend, leading to Kinnoull Hill, whose summit, at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by various pleasant walks. The height of the precipice of Kinnoull Hill is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords an enchanting prospect. The noble river that flows at the base of this towering cliff, the hills and more concentrated objects in the foreground, and the grandeur of the mountainous perspective, present a panorama rarely excelled. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful castle of Kinfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, so richly embellished by the late Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles above Perth, stands Scone Palace. The original edifice, of historical notoriety, has been replaced by a modern pile of buildings; they are surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished by wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which give it an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnised in the palace of Scone. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the estate.

The public buildings in Perth, especially those of late erection, display much taste and spirit. The most prominent are the County Buildings. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smart, is situated in Tay street, on the bank of the Tay. The front is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment. From the entrance hall a passage leads to the county hall, which is a fine room, 63 feet by 40, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains a commodious justiciary hall of semi-circular form, with a spacious gallery. The remainder of the building on the same floor includes the sheriff court and room, sheriff's clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited; above is a spacious ball and card room, &c. This building having been found to afford insufficient accommodation, an addition was erected in 1866, on the side of South street. The new Public Hall, the property of a limited liability company, and opened in the spring of 1881, at a cost of £8,000, is capable of seating from 1,200 to 1,400 people, and contains every convenience; the platform is arranged and fitted up with scenery suitable for dramatic and operatic purposes. The Perth Boys' and Girls' Religious Society Hall, erected in 1881, at a cost of about £3,200, will accommodate 600 to 700 children, and contains, besides the hall, directors' room, two large class rooms, lady workers' room, and other conveniences. The Perthshire Natural History Museum has, exclusive of the museum hall, a large lecture room, library and laboratory. These buildings, forming one construction, between 200 and 300 feet in length, are built in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, from the designs of Mr. James Young, architect, of Perth. The new Municipal Buildings, erected in 1881, at a cost of £13,000, are situated at the east end of High street, and have a neat and handsome appearance; they are in the Tudor style of architecture, from the design of Mr. Heiton, of Perth, are a great addition to the public buildings of the city, and having a frontage to the river, form in conjunction with the above, an ornament to this locality. They contain the offices of the city clerk, chamberlain, registrar, assessor, police superintendent, treasurer to the police commissioners and gas offices. The burgh court room, which has its principal entrance from Tay street, is on the first floor above the police office, and communicating therewith. The council chamber, or Commissioners' Hall, is considered the most perfect of its kind in Scotland, and occupies the principal portion of the building, and is entered from High street; it is lighted by large mullioned and transomed windows which have been gratuitously filled with stained glass, illustrative of personages in Sir Walter Scott's novel "The Fair Maid of Perth." A panelled dado, 6 feet high, is carried round the room. The City Hall, at the west end of St. John's church, erected by the town, is one of the most capacious public rooms in the provinces, seating 1,500 persons. It is open for public meetings on the payment of moderate fees on application to the City Chamberlain.

Perth has long been noted for its dyeworks and for the manufacture of inks, but of late it has also become famous for the manufacture of gauge glasses, which are sent to all parts of the world. This business is carried on extensively by the firms of Messrs. Moncrieff and Tomey and Sons. There are also extensive works for the manufacture of linen and jute, wincyes, woollens, &c.; brewing, tanning, iron founding, rope and sail making, and other branches of industry, and skill are also pursued, whilst the coal, corn and timber trades employ in the aggregate a considerable capital. The city possesses extensive railway communication by means of the Caledonian, North British and Highland railways. There are eight banking establishments settled in Perth, exclusive of one for savings. The hotels are of a highly respectable character. The Royal George Hotel, in George street; the Salutation, in South street; People's Royal British, and the Queen's (opposite the railway terminus) are comfortable and well-conducted establishments. Vessels of 200 tons burthen, owing to skilful dredging, can deliver and receive cargoes at the harbour; and a steamer passes frequently between Perth and Dundee.

The government of the city is vested in a lord provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors. The council thus consists of twenty-six members, all of whom, with the exception of the dean of guild, are, since the passing of the Reform Bill of 1867, elected by household suffrage. The elective constituency is divided into four wards. The dean of guild is a member of council ex-officio, and is chosen by the Guildry Incorporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors from amongst themselves. The council meets on the first Monday in every month; a sheriff court is held every Tuesday and Friday during session, and two courts at least in each vacation. The police of the city are under the charge of a superintendent, and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offences. The police, lighting, cleansing, paving, &c. are under the charge of the Town Council Commissioners, under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with a confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion. James VI. accepted the municipal office of provost of the city, and partook at the Cross of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion. The city returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, C. S. Parker, Esq., being the present representative.

During recent years some beautiful churches have been erected in Perth. St. John's church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built of stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of Saint Johnstoun. Although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it was once a very fine edifice. Some extensive repairs have greatly improved its external appearance in later times, and while in former times the interior was in one, it is now divided to accommodate three congregations—the East, West and Middle. On the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells, covered by a kind of portico, and a singularly looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer Knox thundered forth his declamations within the venerable pile. At the extremity of High street, in Methven street, stands St. Paul's church, a more modern and not inelegant structure of stone, with a substantial steeple. St. Leonard's church, a modest structure, erected in King street in 1835—the expense being defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions—is incorporated with the Establishment. St. John's Episcopal church, Princes street, stands on the site of a former chapel; it was originally the only Episcopal church in Perth. It is a handsome edifice in the early English style, and the interior is very elegantly finished; it is seated for about 500. There is also an Episcopal school church near the station, in connection with St. John's, which is used on week days as a school. St. Ninian's Cathedral in Athole street (also Episcopal) was built in 1850. It is in the Scotch middle-pointed style of architecture; only a part of the proposed building is erected, but it is now (1888) in process of completion, and when finished will be a great ornament to the city. The Free Church have numerous edifices, as have also the different bodies of Presbyterian dissenters; and there is also a Gaelic church. The Baptists have a commodious chapel in South street, and the Roman Catholics one in Melville street. St. Mary's, Kinnoull Hill, is a Roman Catholic establishment, consisting of the church and residence of the Redemptorist Fathers. The house serves also for the accommodation of clergy and laity who come here to spend a short time in spiritual exercises. The building, though simple in its details, forms by its size and proportions a handsome and imposing edifice. It is in the early English style, and is a very perfect specimen of the simple and graceful architecture of the twelfth century. The house and church were built from the designs of Mr. Heiton, city architect.

There are three newspapers published in Perth. The Perthshire Advertiser, published three times a week (Liberal), which has a large and influential circulation in Perthshire and the Midland counties, was established in 1829. The Perthshire Constitutional and Journal (Conservative), was established in 1832, and circulates among the nobility, gentry, &c. The Perthshire Courier, established 1809, is a Liberal in politics, and the organ of the Free Church party; it devotes much space to ecclesiastical matters.

The city of Perth contains several charitable and well-supported institutions for the sick and destitute. Among these are the County and City Infirmary (attached to which is a District and Dispensary department), a Hospital for Incurables, Murray's Royal Institution (an asylum for the insane), King James the Sixth's Hospital, the Destitute Sick Society, &c. The Infirmary is a commanding structure, the first stone of which was laid by the late Lord Kinnaird in 1836. The late Marquis of Breadalbane and Dr. Brown, of Perth, left liberal bequests to this institution. Additional wards for the treatment of infectious diseases were erected in 1865, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed principally by subscription. King James the Sixth's Hospital was founded by King James VI. in 1569, and charters were granted by that monarch in 1569, and 1587, and confirmed by Acts of Parliament in 1587 and 1592, "to provide by all honest ways and means an hospital for the poor, maimed, distressed persons, orphans and fatherless barns within our burgh of Perth," and for the endowment of which he gave all the lands, biggins, tenements, kirks, orchards, &c., which pertained to the chaplainries, altarages, and perbendaries, founded in whatever kirk, chapel or college within the liberties and privileges of the said burgh of Perth; all the lands, &c., which pertained to the Blackfriars, Greyfriars and Carmelite monks at the Reformation—the profits of the same to be applied, in all time coming, to the hospital and sustenance of the poor." In 1812 the managers found they were getting into debt, and instead of keeping inmates in the building, they now give them an equivalent of £6 and £12 a year as outdoor pensioners. At the present time the building is chiefly converted into dwelling houses for the working classes. The Hospital for Incurables is situated on the Dundee road, and usually contains from six to twelve patients. Murray's Royal Institution, erected from a bequest of Mr. James Murray, a native of Perth, was opened in 1827, for the reception of 80 patients. It is situated on an eminence of considerable elevation on the north-west side of the Hill of Kinnoull, and is in the Grecian-Doric style of architecture. The Poorhouse, an extensive pile of buildings, is situated on the Glasgow road, and was erected by the Perth Parochial Board, at a cost of £8,000. The Antiquarian Museum possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens. In the centre of Rose terrace were erected in 1805 the Public Seminaries, of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. Since the passing of the Scotch Education Act, 1872, the School Board has remodelled the interior of the buildings and added accessories suitable to modern ideas. It has also instituted a curriculum extending over a period of three years, beginning with session 1881-2. The school is separated into two divisions—the lower or elementary school, and the higher or secondary school; the latter having for its object what is commonly called middle class education, as given in the best higher public schools. The session commences in September and ends on 30th June. The masters comprehend a rector for classics, a mathematical master, an English master, master of modern languages, writing master, drawing master, lady superintendent, who is also infants' teacher, with their assistants. Sharp's Educational Institute is in South Methven street. This large and elegant building, erected by the trustees of the late Mr. John Sharp, baker, Perth, was opened in September, 1860. The institution contains four departments—the industrial, the infants', the junior, and the senior. Special attention is given to the industrial training of girls in sewing, knitting, household economy, &c. The elder boys are taught calisthenics and drill. A beautiful structure has been erected near the bridge, which forms a handsome termination to George street. It is dedicated to the memory of the late Thomas Marshall, Esq. of Glenalmond, formerly lord provost. The form of this chapel is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico; the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome. In the interior are halls for the public library and the museum of the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth. This structure was raised by private subscription. The Freemason's Hall is a neat building in Parliament close, High street, and contains a spacious room. It was built on the site of the old Parliament House, in 1818, and is the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. A statue of the late Prince Consort was erected in 1864, and was inaugurated by Her Majesty on the 30th of August of that year. On this occasion the late Sir David Rose, then lord provost, was knighted. The statue is the work of Mr. Brodie, sculptor, Edinburgh, and is much admired. On the Inches many of the citizens ardently engage in athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf. The Royal Perth Golfing Society includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry. The barracks, erected in 1795, at the west end of Athole street, were originally intended to accommodate 200 cavalry, but are now devoted to the use of infantry. The weekly market day is Friday. The fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the dates formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Falkirk and other places; they are now, therefore, held on the first Fridays in March, April, July, and September, on the third Friday in October, the second Friday in December, and a sheep and wool fair the first Tuesday after Inverness wool fair, and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May. There are now two great cattle and sheep markets in Perth, sales taking place on Mondays, and Friday. The population of Perth in 1871 was 25,606, and in 1881, 28,948.

CRAIGEND is a small hamlet on the Edinburgh road, 2 miles from and in the parish of Perth. There is a United Presbyterian church and a school here.

KINFAUNUS is a parish 2 miles E. of Perth, and is about five miles long, by a width of two and half miles. It is situated on the banks of the river Tay, and is a station on the Perth and Dundee line. An Established and a Free church and a Board school are in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 4,291; population in 1881, 583.

GLENCARSE is a small village in the parish of Kinfauns, 6¼ miles E. by S. from Perth. It is a station on the Perth and Dundee section of the Caledonian railway. The Episcopal church of All Saints is a neat building, in the domestic Gothic style of architecture, erected at the cost of £1,500. It is in the diocese of Brechin.

KINNOULL parish lies with its western extremity to the Tay, opposite Perth, extending thence in an irregular manner for nearly four miles, with a general breadth of one mile. The parish consists of several detached portions, including Balbeggie, Murrayshall, Balthayock, and Inchyria. The surface is hilly, but romantic and exceedingly beautiful, being covered to a great extent with fine plantations. From the summit of Kinnoull Hill a beautiful view of the surrounding country may be obtained. Many handsome villas have been erected within the last few years on the rising grounds to the east of the river, and forming part of the suburb of Kinnoull. The ancient church of the parish was a rectory, in the proprietary of the monastery of Cambuskenneth, and was dedicated to St. Constantine. The modern church is a neat edifice, built on a bank, overhanging the Tay. Near this once stood the old castle of Kinnoull. Kinnoull has given the title of earl to a branch of the family of Hay of Erroll, the first of the title being ennobled in 1627, as Lord Hay of Kinfauns, and elevated to the earldom in 1633 as Earl of Kinnoull and Viscount Dupplin. A handsome school has been erected under the combined Boards of Perth and Kinnoull. The parish comprises 3,646 acres, and in 1881 the population numbered 3,461.

PITLOCHRY,

MOULIN, LOGIERAIT, BALLINLUIG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PITLOCHRY is a thriving village and post town in the parish of Moulin, Parliamentary division of West Perthshire, and in the Perth County Court district, and is a station on the Highland railway. It is 13 miles N.W. from Dunkeld, and about five from Logierait, situated on the banks of the Tummel, and surrounded on all sides by some of the most beautiful and varied scenery found in the highlands of Perthshire. The trade of the village is mainly confined to that of a domestic and retail character—except that the distillation of whiskey is carried on somewhat extensively in the village and neighbourhood. The place, too, is of sufficient importance to encourage the establishment of three banking concerns, branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and there is, besides, a branch of the Perth Savings Bank. There is a manufactory in the village, carried on by Messrs. Macnaughton, which is noted for the excellence and choice of its Highland tweeds and plaids, &c., and there are several good hotels. The Free church here is a handsome edifice, and for the convenience of the great influx of the English visitors there is a small but beautiful church, about half a mile to the east of the village, called Holy Trinity Episcopal church. The Established church, a neat structure in the Gothic style of architecture, was erected in 1884, on an elevated site, at a cost of upwards of £2,000. There is a Hydropathic Establishment, the finest in Scotland, situate to the east of the town, the cost of erection being over £100,000. The house occupies a commanding position on the sunny side of the Vale of Athole, the public rooms being large and richly furnished. The Turkish and other baths are constructed on the most scientific principles, and for comfort are not surpassed by any in the country, and there are spacious billiard and recreation rooms. The grounds, extending to 35 acres, abound in natural and artistic beauties, and contain bowling, croquet, archery and lawn tennis greens. Accommodation is provided for about 250 visitors, the whole being under the personal management of the proprietor, Mr. William Macdonald. Fairs are held annually on the Saturday before Amulree, in May; on the Friday after Falkirk tryst in August (for lambs), and on the third Wednesday in October (old style.) Population in 1881, 777.

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athole, bounded on the north-east by the parish of Kirkmichael, on the south-east by Logierait, on the soath-west by Dull, and on the west and north-west by Blair-Athole. It is intersected by the Briarachan and the Fernate, which unite within the district. The latter takes its rise in a loch in the north-east of the parish, and runs through Glenfernate, and its junction with the Briarachan forms the Ardale. The several lochs are well stocked with trout, particularly Loch Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountainous, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is half a mile distant from Pitlochry; near to it stands the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. There is an excellent hotel in the village. The parish church, which was erected in 1832, and the parish school are both situated in this village. In this parish is the pass of KILLIECRANKIE, noted for the battle fought there on the 17th of July, 1689, between King William's army, commanded by General Mackay, and a body of Highlanders under Viscount Dundee, where, after defeating the royal troops, the gallant Claverhouse met with his death. There is a fair held at Moulin annually on the first Tuesday in March. The parish of Moulin has an acreage of 44,640, and in 1881 had a population of 2,066.

LOGIERAIT is a parish in the northern part of the county, the village being 8 miles W. from Dunkeld, and the like distance E. from Aberfeldy. It is noted for the distillation of whisky. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending along the banks of each seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of a greater part of the parish, which, including the winding of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands in some places extending to the rivers' banks, and the distant mountains, form one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. On an eminence above the junction, a Celtic cross commands the valley. This is a monument erected to the memory of the late Duke of Athole by the gentlemen of the county and his tenantry. A Combination Poorhouse was erected in 1864 for the accommodation of Logierait and ten adjoining parishes. A chain boat commenced crossing the Tay at Logierait in August, 1824, for the accommodation of foot and horse passengers. A coach and four may go into the conveyance without taking the horses from the carriage. It was at Logierait that Prince Charles kept his prisoners after the battle of Prestonpans. Acreage of the parish, 37,759; population in 1881, 2,323.

BALLINLUIG is a small village in the parish of Logierait, situated about half-way between Dunkeld and Pitlochry. Here is a Baptist chapel, an excellent school, and there is a station on the Highland Railway, which is also the junction for Aberfeldy.

SCONE,

BALBEGGIE, CAIRNBEDDIE, COLLACE, GUILDTOWN, KINROSSIE, AND ST. MARTIN.

SCONE is a parish lying on the left bank of the Tay, opposite the parishes of Redgorton and Perth. The village, sometimes called NEW SCONE, is about 2 miles N.E. from Perth, and with the palace occupies a retiring part of the grounds which rise from the Tay, and commands an outlook upon the river and the vale of Perth. This place is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early Scottish monarchs, the place of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In the vicinage formerly stood an abbey, founded by Alexander I. in the year 1114. Some historians have described Scone as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly was the chief seat of the Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of the abbey was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I.) which was used as the coronation seat, and upon which all the Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Baliol, when Edward I. carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to regality in Westminster Abbey. The last monarch crowned at Scone was Charles II., January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition in this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace an elegant new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield, pleasantly seated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved; in particular, a bed that belonged to James VI., and another, the hangings of which were wrought by the fair hands of Queen Mary, when a prisoner at Lochleven. The music gallery occupies the same site as the noble hall in which the coronations were performed, and the large gallery for the reception of a collection of valuable paintings is one hundred and eighty feet long. About fifty yards from the house is an aisle of the old abbey of Scone, containing a magnificent marble monument to a Viscount Stormont, who died upwards of two centuries ago. At a little distance further stands the old market cross of Scone, surrounded by a wilderness of pleasure grounds, which have usurped the station of the ancient village; it has been aptly observed that "there are many instances of towns losing their market crosses, but this is the only cross which has lost its town." The places of worship are Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. Acreage of the parish, 7,815. Population in 1881, 2,402.

BALBEGGIE is a village in the parish of Kinnoull, 3 miles N.E. from Scone, and 5 N.E. from Perth. It contains a United Presbyterian church.

COLLACE is a parish 7 miles N.E. from Perth, surrounded by the parishes of Cargill, St. Martin, Kinnaird and Abernyte. The hill of Dunsinane, 1,114 feet above the sea level, is in this parish. Upon this insulated and chosen site (rendered famous by Shakspere), Macbeth, the Thane of Glamis, in 1043, erected a strong and lofty castle, keeping the surrounding country in the most abject subjection. In 1054 an overwhelming force, supported by Edward the Confessor, the reigning King of England, marched upon the stronghold on behalf of Malcolm, son of King Duncan, whom Macbeth had previously murdered. Being observed from the battlements, Macbeth fled northwards, but was pursued and slain, according to tradition, at Lumphannan, in Aberdeenshire. The fortress was razed to the ground. The parish church is a neat Gothic structure, with square tower, erected in 1813. Freestone of good quality abounds in the parish. KINROSSIE is a small village in the parish, the acreage of which is 2,927. Population in 1881, 409.

ST. MARTIN is a parish about 5 miles N.E. from Perth, extending along the banks of the Tay, forming an oblong square, averaging nearly two miles in breadth. The soil in general is black, and seems originally to have been taken from moorland. At CAIRNBEDDIE are the remains of a castle, once occupied by Macbeth, and, as tradition states, this place not being secure, he removed to the celebrated hill of Dunsinane, where he fortified a castle. About a mile from his old residence, at a place called "The Witch Stane" (whereon a remarkable stone still stands), is pointed out the spot where he was met by the witches who warned him to beware "till Birnam forest came to Dunsinane," &c. There is a parish church. GUILDTOWN is a small village in the parish of St. Martin. Acreage of the parish 6,565. Population in 1881, 741.

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL-IN-MENTEITH, is a village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles W. by N. from Edinburgh, 39 S.W. from Perth, 5 S. from Callander, 4 S. from Doune, and 4 N. from Kippen. It consists chiefly of one street, extending nearly half a mile in length. The inhabitants are employed mostly in agriculture. Two churches of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship; and there are several schools. The parish lies in the southern quarter of the county, in the strath of Menteith; it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and a third about seven. A large portion of the parish was formerly overspread with moss, and at one time entirely covered by an inland sea, but, with the exception of about five hundred acres, it is now free. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling to Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss, from which the estate is now said to be almost free. Population in 1881, 474.

RENFREWSHIRE.

THIS county, of great importance as connected with the manufactures of North Britain, is bounded on the south by Ayrshire, and on the east and north-east by Lanarkshire; the Clyde river and Firth separate it from the county of Dumbarton on the north, and the Firth of Clyde divides it from Argyleshire on the west. In figure it is nearly triangular, measuring from north-west to south-east about thirty miles, and varying in breadth from ten to fifteen miles. It embraces an area of 162,428 statute acres, or 254 square miles, and in size is the twenty-sixth, and in population the fifth, of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion, this district was inhabited by the Damnii, a British tribe who also occupied the adjacent vale of Strathclyde. The invaders concentrated themselves at a spot near the present site of Paisley, to which they gave the name of Vanduaria. In after times the Romanised inhabitants were subjected to the sway of the Scots, and in 1097 submitted to the silent revolution which took place under Edgar, when the Celtic customs were changed for the municipal laws which the Scoto-Saxon government gradually introduced. In the reign of David I., Walter, the son of Alan, fled from Shropshire during the troublous conflicts of Maud and Stephen, and settled in the district, where David I. made him steward and gave him lands to support the dignity of his office. Besides these possessions, he subsequently acquired the whole district of Strathgryfe, and the western half of Kyle, in Ayrshire, which hence was called Kyle Stewart. Such was the manner in which the first of the royal family of Stewart settled in Scotland. At this period the country in this quarter was in a semi-barbarous state, but Walter the Stewart introduced new and civilised usages. He settled many of his military followers on his lands, and by founding the abbey of Paisley, introduced a body of instructed men, who taught the ancient people domestic arts and foreign manners. For several centuries this district formed a portion of Lanarkshire. In 1404 Robert III. created a principality, consisting of the barony of Renfrew and the whole of the Stewart's estates, with the earldom of Carrick and the barony of King's Kyle, all of which he granted, in a free regality, as a provision for his son James; and this principality continued, in after times, the appropriate appanage of the eldest sons of the Scottish monarchs. In consequence of these arrangements, the identity of the barony of Renfrew and the shire of Lanark was dissolved, and the former placed under the jurisdiction of a separate sheriff.

SOIL, PRODUCE, AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is very much diversified. In those parts of the high grounds which are not covered by heath and moss, a fine light soil on a gravelly sub-stratum is generally found. In the portion formed of detached hills the service is a thin earth, based on gravel; and in the level districts the plough or spade sinks through a deep, rich brown loam. More than one-half of the shire, comprehending the west and south-east portions, is hilly, and devoted to pasture. The cultivated districts comprise the north, the north-east, and the centre of the county, and consist partly of low district elevations, and partly of a level tract of rich loam between Paisley and the river Clyde. The hilly part of the country varies in elevation from 500 to 600 feet; the hill of greatest altitude in the shire is about 1,240 feet high. Owing to the great demand in this county for dairy produce, and that also of the garden and the fold (arising from the vicinity of large and populous towns), nearly two-thirds of the arable land in the shire is kept under grass. Nevertheless, the system of agriculture is of the most advanced kind, the crops in general being excellent, and comprising wheat, barley, oats, peas, beans, turnips, and potatoes, of which latter great quantities are grown for Glasgow and the markets of other large towns. The minerals of this shire are of very considerable value, coal, limestone, ironstone, and sandstone abounding in various parts of it; the first-named being wrought principally in the neighbourhoods of Renfrew, Bishopton, Quarrelton, Nitshill, Neilston, and other places. Underneath the ironstone large quantities of shale are found, from which is extracted a valuable oil, and for the manufacture of which large works are established. In point of commercial and manufacturing importance, this county is second only to that of Lanark, and with it unites in constituting the great manufacturing districts of Scotland. The goods produced are chiefly of cotton and silk, including amongst various articles and fabrics shawls of infinite diversity in texture and price. Whilst Paisley is the head quarters of the trade in these articles, the business of weaving is pursued, to a greater or less extent, in almost every town, village, and hamlet. Another important branch is the manufacture of sewing cotton, which is carried on very extensively at Paisley. Besides those already mentioned, there are also numerous bleachfields, calico and shawl printing works, dyeworks, immense flax-spinning mills, linen thread, sailcloth, paper, starch, and earthenware manufactories, large iron foundries, engineering, ship and boat building works, distilleries, breweries, sugar refineries, and many other branches of commerce of a varied and also of an important character. The free export of manufactured goods is promoted by the different sea-ports on the Clyde, especially Greenock, by which also foreign produce is imported. The trade is further assisted by the Forth and Clyde Canal, which connects this county with many other shires.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of Renfrewshire are of no great magnitude in themselves, but by the industry and enterprise of the inhabitants of the district they are rendered of material importance to society. The principal streams are the White Cart, the Black Cart, and the Gryffe, all of which ultimately unite and fall into the Clyde below Inchinnan Bridge; that is, about half-way down the river between Glasgow and Port Glasgow. The White Cart (which, by way of distinction, is generally denominated The Cart), has its creative springs at Eaglesham, in this county, and in the high grounds of East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; and, passing Paisley in its course, joins the Gryffe at the bridge above named. The Black Cart issues from the beautiful loch of Castle Semple, in Lochwinnoch parish, and flowing northward falls in with the Gryffe at Walkinshaw. The Gryffe rises in the high grounds above Largs, and flows eastwards until it meets the Black Cart; the Gryffe bestows the name of Strathgryfe upon the vale through which it flows. The lakes are Castle Semple Loch, Queenside Loch (in the parish of Lochwinnoch), two lochs in Neilston parish, and several smaller ones. The first-named (Castle Semple) is situate in the southern border of the county; its banks are beautifully wooded in some places, and it contains a small island, on which stand the ruins of a castle. This county greatly benefits by its railway transit, being intersected by the main lines of the Caledonian and the Glasgow and South-Western Railways, with their branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Renfrewshire comprehends fifteen entire parishes and four parts of parishes. It contains two representative burghs—Port Glasgow and Renfrew—which join with Rutherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning one member to Parliament. Greenock and Paisley each send a representative, and the county having, on the passage of the Re-distribution of Seats Bill, 1885, been separated into the East and West Divisions, now returns two members instead of one, as formerly. The gentlemen now sitting are:—East Division (parliamentary constituency, 8,765), Michael H. Shaw-Stewart, Esq.; West Division (parliamentary constituency, 7,565), Lieut.-Colonel Sir Archibald C. Campbell, Bart. The Lord Lieutenant is Sir M. R. Shaw-Stewart, Bart. According to the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 216,947; namely, 103,669 males, and 113,278 females. In 1881 the figures were:—Males, 126,743; females, 136,631; total, 263,374; showing an increase over the previous return of 46,427. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 (exclusive of railways and public undertakings, £75,615) is £689,055.

BARRHEAD,

NEILSTON, HURLET, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BARRHEAD is a thriving village in the parish of Neilston, county of Renfrew, 4 miles S.E. from Paisley, and 7 S.W. from Glasgow. The town or village consists chiefly of one principal street, with several smaller ones diverging from it, and together with the suburbs of GRAHAMSTON and DUNTERLIE is the centre of a manufacturing and thickly populated neighbourhood. The trade and manufactures of the district are very considerable, consisting of several large bleach fields, a number of extensive calico and shawl printing establishments, mills for cotton spinning and power-loom weaving, besides collieries and engineering and ironfoundry works. These altogether give employment to a vast number of both sexes, and contribute materially to the prosperity of the place. In the village there are two banking establishments, several respectable shops, and a gas works. A justice of the peace court is held on the first Monday in each month. The railway station, a handsome one, is situated close to the town. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, an Evangelical Union chapel, and one for Roman Catholics. There are three schools built under the Scotch Education Act, each affording accommodation for about 350 children. There is also a Mechanics' Institute, with an extensive library attached. Population of Barrhead in 1881, 7,495.

NEILSTON is a village in the parish of its name, 9 miles S.W. from Glasgow, the like distance N.E. from Stewarton, 5 S. from Paisley and 2 S. from Barrhead, eligibly situated on the river Leven on the road to Irvine, in the midst of a well-cultivated and thriving neighbourhood. In the centre of the village stands the parochial church, surmounted by a handsome steeple and clock. The situation of the village is healthy, and is within ten minutes' walk of the station. In the vicinity are several bleach fields and printworks, and a branch of the Clydesdale Banking Co. Limited. There is a school under the Elementary Education Act, and an endowed school. The inhabitants also support several institutions and societies of a charitable, friendly, and educational character; there is also an agricultural society. The parish extends eight miles in length by from two to four in breadth. From the summit of a ridge of hills, which extends through the entire length of the parish, the prospect is grand and comprehensive, and several plantations add materially to the beauty of the scene. There are two small lakes, called Loch Lebo and Loch Long. From the former issues the Lugton, a tributary stream of the Garnock: and the latter discharges itself by the Leven, which runs north-east to join the Cart. The parish has an area of 12,481 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 11,359, of which 2,311 belonged to the village.

Two miles from Barrhead, on the Glasgow road, is the small village of HURLET, where are large chemical and extensive colliery works. Population in 1881, 341.

CATHCART

IS a pleasant village in the parish of that name, partly in the county of Lanark, but chiefly in that of Renfrew, distant 2 miles s. from Glasgow. Its original designation was Caer-Cart, i.e., the Castle on the river Cart. The parish is of considerable extent, and is almost wholly arable. Here are the engineering works of Messrs. G. & J. Weir. Margarine, paper, pasteboard, snuff, and gelatine dry plates for photographic purposes are also manufactured here. The surface of the land is agreeably diversified with hills and dales, and presents, in many situations, great picturesque beauty. Agriculture is the occupation of a great proportion of the inhabitants; the very summits of the hills are ploughed and cultivated. The parish church, which is in the Gothic style of architecture, will seat 850 perons, and a Free church has accommodation for 650. There are also several good schools in the parish. The Couper Institute, a handsome stone building erected in 1887, at a cost of about £6,000, was presented to the parish by the late Robert Couper, of Millholm. The field of Langside, in this parish, is remarkable for being the scene of the last fruitless effort of the unfortunate Mary to regain her crown. An eminence is still pointed out where the Queen stood during the engagement. The old castle of Cathcart is a very conspicuous ruin, placed in a commanding situation, with two sides defended by the Cart, to which there is almost perpendicular descent of a tremendous depth. It belonged to the Lords of Cathcart, and has been dismantled over a century. Cathcart parish has an aggregate area of 4,064 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 12,211, of which Old Cathcart had 1,003, and New Cathcart, 689.

EAGLESHAM

IS a neat modern village, 10 miles s.w. from Glasgow, and 11 s. from Paisley, pleasantly situated in the lower part of the parish to which it has given its name, about a mile to the north-west of the old castle of Polnoon; it is composed of two rows of houses, a tributary rivulet to the Cart running through the intermediate space. The old village was demolished in 1769, but was shortly afterwards rebuilt under the direction of a former Earl of Eglintoun, who also in 1790 erected a church, of octagonal form, with an elegant steeple, furnished with a good clock and a fine toned bell; there are likewise places of worship for United Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. The barony of Eaglesham was in the Earl of Eglintoun's family (from the year 1250, but has passed into that of Allan Gilmour, Esq. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in May and August (old style). Eaglesham, which embraces 15,666 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 1,385.

GOUROCK.

GOUROCK is a small seaport town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Inverkip, three miles W. from Greenock, beautifully situated on the south side of a fine bay of the river Clyde. The haven is favoured with excellent anchorage ground, and vessels to and from Glasgow, Port Glasgow and Greenock frequently take refuge here in stormy weather; a small but commodious quay was constructed, at the cost of about £5,000, which has nine feet depth at low water—an advantage possessed by no other on the Clyde. The town, which is upwards of a mile in length, has become a fashionable resort in the summer months of families from Glasgow and other places. It is said that this port was the first place in Great Britain where red herrings were prepared. The lands of Gourock were incorporated into a burgh of barony by a charter from William and Mary, dated the 24th of April, 1694, with very extensive powers, and amongst other privileges gives authority to hold a weekly market and two annual fairs, but the successive proprietors have never yet thought proper to avail themselves of this. A neat chapel was built in the year 1773. From the increase of the inhabitants and the influx of visitors in the summer, it was to small for their accommodation; to obviate this inconvenience a very commodious place of worship, with a handsome tower and clock, was erected in 1832. A Free church, a United Presbyterian church, one for Independents, and a Scottish Episcopal church are the other places of worship. There are also commodious Board schools. The Gamble Institute, opened in 1876, was built and endowed by Mrs. Gamble, of Ashburn, at a cost of about £8,000. It contains a public hall, reading-room and library, bath rooms, &c. Tramways were laid here from Greenock and opened July, 1873. A railway is now being constructed connecting this place with Greenock, being a continuation of the Caledonian railway from Glasgow to Greenock. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established here, and works have been erected for the supply of gas to the town, the population of which in 1881 was 3,336.

To GLASGOW, GREENOCK & to the different watering places, Steamers leave the Quay head frequently during the day in summer

GREENOCK,

THE first seaport in Scotland, is 22 miles W. from Glasgow, 15 W. from Paisley, 66 W. from Edinburgh, and 419 from London; situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, and connected with Glasgow by means of the Glasgow and South-Western and the Caledonian railways, and with the coast by the Wemyss Bay railway. The site of the town is unrivalled for the command of grand and picturesque scenery, combining water, wood, and mountain. In the early part of the eighteenth century Greenock was a small village, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and without quay or harbour; it now, however, possesses several harbours, which have been built at a considerable expense, are most commodious and capacious, and are of sufficient depth to float vessels of great burthen; and in the roads there is good anchorage for ships of the largest class. The quays are spacious, and have well-constructed sheds, supported by iron pillars, for the security of merchandise against the weather; there are also good graving and other docks, capable of receiving vessels of any size. The Mid Harbour, the original harbour of the port, was constructed during the last century, and is about eight acres in extent. The East India Harbour, formed early in this century, is about five acres in extent. The Victoria Harbour, covering over six acres, cost £120,000, and was opened in 1850. The contractors were Messrs. Locke and Brassey. This harbour is one of the finest tidal harbours in the kingdom, and is particularly well suited for vessels of large tonnage. There is a crane capable of lifting eighty tons, so that steamers of the largest class may have their engines fitted without touching the ground. The Albert Harbour, built while James J. Greive, Esq. M.P. was provost, is about eleven acres in extent, and cost, including quays, £200,000. This harbour was opened in 1860, the contractors being Messrs. York, of Glasgow. The Princess pier, which extends along the Clyde westwards from the harbour about 1,600 feet, was erected at a cost of £70,000 by the same contractors. With this pier the Glasgow and South-Western Railway has direct communication, thus affording great facilities of conveyance for passengers and their luggage between the steamboats and the trains. The pier was opened in 1870. The James Watt wet dock, which is so named in honour of the famous engineer who was a native of this town, is one of the finest wet docks in the kingdom, and was constructed while Dugald Campbell, Esq. was provost. It was designed by Mr. Walter R. Kinipple, C.E., of Greenock and Westminster, is upwards of 2,000 feet in length, 32 feet in depth, and 400 feet in width, and is capable of accommodating the largest vessels afloat. The contractor was Mr. John Waddell, of Edinburgh. There are large warehouses on the margin of the quays for grain and other merchandise, with elevators and hoists of the most improved description worked by hydraulic power. This dock was opened for traffic in 1886. As the Caledonian and Glasgow and South Western railways have a connection with the docks and warehouses, the means of receiving and distributing goods to all parts of the country is of the most complete character. There is also a large tidal harbour outside the wet dock, where timber vessels can be discharged, and at which coal and pig iron can be shipped. This harbour is 50 acres in extent. These works cost in all about half a million sterling. There are three public graving docks connected with the harbour, and two private ones in the hands of Messrs. Caird & Co. and Scott & Co. shipbuilders. The oldest of the public graving docks, which is situated at the Mid-Harbour, was built in 1780, and is fitted for vessels of 150 feet in length and drawing 10 feet. Another, at the East India Harbour, is 300 feet in length, 16 feet in depth and 40 feet wide on the sill. The third which is of recent construction, is large, commodious and useful, and is 600 feet in length, 20 feet in depth, and 60 feet in width on the sill. It is named the Garvel Dock, and was constructed while James Morton, Esq. was provost; it cost £120,000, and the contractors were Messrs. Kirk, of London.

Spacious municipal buildings have been erected in the centre of the town for the accommodation of the various departments connected with the Corporation and Harbour Trust, the architects being Messrs. Barclay, of Glasgow. These buildings, erected while Provost Campbell was in office, cost, including the ground, about £120,000, and are arranged so as to form part of the existing Town Hall, which is a very commodious structure, and is seated for about 2,000. The contractors were, for the stonework, Mr. Maxwell, Glasgow, and for the timber work, Messrs. Miller & Brown, Greenock. The old town offices, which were taken down to make way for the new buildings, were designed in 1760 by the father of James Watt, who was at that time one of the bailies of the town. The Esplanade was formed at a cost of about £20,000. It extends from the foot of Campbell street, in a noble sweep, of about a mile and a quarter, along the shore of the Firth. It is protected by a substantial sea wall, with palisades, and it is provided with numerous landing places; it is also well lighted with gas, and seats are disposed at convienent distances for the accommodation of pedestrians. A fountain has been erected on the Esplanade by a number of the admirers of John Galt, the novelist, who lived for several years in Greenock, and is buried here. Gas works on an extensive scale have been erected on Inch Green Island at the east end of the burgh. Among the public edifices of this town, the Custom House decidedly ranks first, and is truly a grand national structure. The selection of its situation is most appropriate; the grand front faces the water, having a fine open space from the edge of the quay. The building is of Grecian architecture, and in it the business of the customs, inland revenue and post office is transacted. The entrance to the Custom House is at the north front, facing the river, and that of the inland revenue at the east front. This fine edifice was erected under the direction of Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh. A Post Office has been opened in Wallace square. The building was erected by the Corporation, and has been leased by the Post Office authorities for twenty years. It is an elegant and commodious structure, with private offices on the upper floors. The site, which is most convenient and central, was formally one of the worst localities, but under the powers of the Town Improvement Act, the old houses were cleared away, and the Post Office building erected. The square was re-named after one of the members of Parliament for Greenock—Robert Wallace—who was one of the most earnest advocates of the penny postage, and the chairman of the committee that reported in favour of its adoption. Under the Improvement Act considerable parts of the older districts of the town have been cleared and rebuilt at a cost of £150,000. This has brought about a large reduction in the death rate, and the town is now one of the healthiest in the country. The Greenock Coffee and News Room, in Cathcart square, is well supplied with the various journals and magazines. This fine room is also used as the Greenock Exchange and Chamber of Commerce, and is supported by subscription, strangers having the privilege of admission. There is a club-house in Ardgowan square, which is handsome and commodious. A wide roadway, leading up to the "Benians," a hill at the west end of the town, overlooking the river, was formed during the depression of trade in 1878, by unemployed workmen, who received an allowance from the Corporation for their labour. It was made while Abram Lyle, Esq., was provost, and it is called after him, the "Lyle Road," its cost being about £17,000. From the top of this road there is a most extensive view of the Clyde from Bowling to Dunoon, and it has become a great resort for artists desirous of painting views on the Clyde. Greenock is the birthplace of the illustrious Watt, the perfecter of the steam engine, who was born in 1736. In commemoration of this circumstance a handsome building has been erected in Union street, called the Watt Monument and Institution, for the purpose of library, art gallery, &c., upon the ground given by the late Sir Michael Shaw-Stewart, Bart. The building is from a design by Mr. Blore, architect, of London, and cost upwards of £7,000. A statue of the deceased engineer, from the chisel of Chantrey, put up at a cost of £2,000, is placed within the entrance of the edifice. The Mechanics' Institute, in Sir Michael street, has also a good library and newsroom. The public baths are in the same building, the entrance being in Tobago street.

Among the most important branches under the head of, or connected with, manufactures are several shipbuilding establishments, the yards of some being so complete as to rank second only to those belonging to the Crown. There are several extensive engine works, marine and otherwise, and iron foundries, breweries, ropewalks, tanyards, and extensive sugar and glucose refineries; manufactories for woollen and sail cloth; a distillery and large mills for spinning wool and flax and for making paper. But in nothing is Greenock more celebrated than in the building and fitting-up of steam vessels, furnishing them for all parts of the world. Most of the fine steamers belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company have been built here. Since the opening of commercial intercourse with India and China, the merchants of this place have prosecuted the trade to those countries with great spirit and commensurate success, the Clyde steamers, from the superiority of their construction, never failing to secure a preference of engagements. Greenock derives vast advantages from the application of steam to navigation, there being a great number of vessels propelled by this powerful auxiliary constantly traversing the Clyde to and from Glasgow and the intermediate places on the banks of the river, where they make stoppages for the convenience of passengers. Large and elegant steamboats leave this port for London, Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry, the Isle of Man, Campbeltown, Ayr, Inverness, and other places in the Highlands, at stated periods. Indeed, no town in the kingdom affords greater facility to travellers by this mode of conveyance than Greenock. The steamers carrying the Irish mails are despatched from this port.

There is in the neighbourhood of the town the greatest amount of water power to be found in the kingdom; this is derived from an extensive breakwater having been thrown across a valley, in the bottom of which a stream of water flowed, now forming a condensed body of that element, two miles long and half a mile wide. Having a depth of sixty feet, and an elevation of five hundred feet above the level of the sea, it furnishes sites for a large number of mills, with power to any extent that may be required. The Clyde Sugar Refinery, one of the works on the line of falls, has a large water wheel 70 feet in diameter, with buckets 12 feet in breadth, and a power equal to 240 horses for driving the machinery. This artificial loch is also rendered subservient to the supply of the town with water for domestic purposes. The undertaking was completed in 1827 by a company, under the title of The Shaws Water Company. There are in the town branch establishments of the following banks, viz., the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Banking Co., Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Provident Savings Bank. The municipal government of Greenock is vested in a provost, six bailies, a town treasurer, a dean of guild, and sixteen councillors, who have power of making laws for the burgh, and of maintaining peace and order within its limits. The present provost is Robert Shankland, Esq. The police are under the most efficient regulation, both those of the town and those of the harbour; the management of the latter is confided to its commissioners along with the town council. The town has a gaol, which is included in the County Buildings, situate in Nelson street; here also are held the sheriff and other courts, and apartments are provided for the necessary officers connected therewith. The burgh sends one member to Parliament; the present (1888) representative is Thomas Sutherland, Esq., of Aberdeen and London, chairman of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Co.

The Theatre Royal, in West Blackhall street, a comfortable and well-appointed place of amusement, was opened in 1858. Considerable facilities are afforded for healthful recreation by the establishment of rowing, cricket, and bowling clubs; these are all well supported, and the grounds and bowling greens are kept in excellent order. The Well Park, in Regent street, is small but well laid out; it overlooks the town, and is approached from Cathcart street by a series of terraces. From it on a clear day fine views of the Clyde and the Argyleshire hills are obtained. The Wellington Park, situated near Drumfrochar road, was formally opened and devoted to the public on the first of June, 1872. It is laid out upon ground presented to the town by Sir Michael R. Shaw-Stewart, Bart., and is of considerable extent; the lower and most level portion contains bowling, cricket, and playing grounds, whilst the more elevated parts, though not susceptible of improvement by cultivation, yet afford space for pleasant rambles, and very fine views are also here presented of the town, the Firth, and surrounding scenery. The cemetery, which is one of the finest in the kingdom, and belongs to the Corporation, is about ninety acres in extent, and is beautifully laid out. Two newspapers are published here, the Greenock Herald and the Greenock Telegraph and Clyde Shipping Gazette. There are several charitable institutions, the finest amongst which, as a building, is Sir Gabriel Wood's Mariners' Asylum, an institution founded by the late Sir Gabriel Wood, for the relief and comfort of aged and decayed master mariners and merchant seamen. The Infirmary, erected in 1809, has been considerably enlarged; it is ornamental as a public edifice, and its utility is universally acknowledged. The Buchanan Night Asylum affords food and shelter to such poor persons as may be without a home. A Sailors' Home, on the same principle as those of Liverpool and Dublin, is established. A museum has been presented to the town by the late Mr. James M'Lean, of West Bank. It is situated in Kelly street, close to the Monument and cost about £7,000; it is also endowed. A new and commodious, Poor House and Lunatic Asylum has been erected by the parochial board of Greenock, at Smithston, about mile out of the town; the cost was over £80,000. The old Meat Market and Slaughter House has been taken down by the Corporation authorities, and new buildings giving better accommodation have been erected. A railway is now (1888) being formed connecting Greenock and Gourock, being a continuation of the Caledonian Railway from Glasgow to Greenock. This line will be a great convenience to the inhabitants, as it provides two additional stations in the town. It will also facilitate the traffic between Glasgow and the coast towns, landing passengers at Dunoon and other watering places within an hour from the time of leaving Glasgow.

About a mile west from Greenock, close to the bank of the Clyde, there has recently been erected a pier and torpedo battery for protecting the river. There are several very agreeable bathing villages in the vicinity. One of these forms a very pleasing and picturesque object from the quays, being seated under the mountains on the opposite side of the Firth, which is several miles across. Steamboats go to and from the different villages during the bathing season.

Greenock comprehends three parishes, respectively called the West parish, the Mid parish, and the East parish—all being erected out of, and separated from, the original parish of Innerkip. The first, which may be styled the mother parish of the three, includes the western part of the town and the greater proportion of the country district. The West parish church is a modern and elegant structure situated in Nelson street; the original church, which was for some time in ruins, has been repaired, and stands near the shore, surrounded by an old burying ground, which is interesting from being the resting place of Burns' "Highland Mary," and to mark which some years since a monument was erected. The Mid parish comprehends the central parts of the town; the church is situated in Cathcart square, and is an elegant structure with a lofty steeple. The site is extremely well selected to render it an ornament to the town, and it forms a highly interesting object in the prospect from the river. The East parish possesses places of worship in Regent street, Cartsburn street, and Ladyburn. There is an Episcopal (English) church in Union street. The Free Church of Scotland has ten places of worship, the United Presbyterian six, and there are buildings connected with the various other denominations, a list of which will be found in the Directory of the town. Greenock Academy is a large establishment for the education of both sexes. It is under the supervision of a rector and lady superintendent, seven assistant masters, and two mistresses. It and ten public schools are under the School Board. Several schools of a very commodious description have been erected by the School Board at a cost of £70,000. The weekly market is held on Friday, and there are two annual fairs, one taking place on the first Thursday in July, the other on the fourth Tuesday of November, and horse and cattle markets twice a year—on the Friday before Glasgow Whit-Monday fair, and on the Friday immediately preceding Kilbarchan fair. The population of the town in 1881 was 69,229.

HOUSTON,

BRIDGE OF WEIR, CROSSLEE, ERSKINE, AND BISHOPTON.

HOUSTON or (Houstoun) is a village or small town in the united parish of Houston and Kilellan, 14 miles W. from Glasgow, 7 N.W. from Paisley, and the like distance S.E. from Port Glasgow, pleasantly situated on both sides of the Houston burn. It consists of two long streets, one on each side of the rivulet. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving and embroidering. At the east end of the town is a small parish church; there are also a Free church and a Roman Catholic chapel and school, also Board schools. It is said that the town is partly built of the stones that once composed the Castle of Houston, an ancient mansion, which formerly stood in this neighbourhood, to the east, the residence of the knights of Houston, and demolished in 1780, by a proprietor of the estate. Population of the village in 1881, 553.

About one mile from Houston and three from Johnstone (a station on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway) most delightfully and romantically situated in a valley, is WEIR BRIDGE, more familiarly known by the name of "Bridge of Weir." It is the boundary of the parish of this quarter, being divided from the parish of Kilbarchan by the river Gryffe. It is rapidly growing into favour as a country residence for Glasgow merchants, a large number of villas having recently been built. About a mile and a half from the village are the New Orphan Homes of Scotland, which are being erected under the superintendence of William Quarrier, Esq., and when completed will have cost about £90,000. In the village are a church of the Establisment, erected at a cost of £3,000, with seating accommodation for 500 persons; a Free church, and a Board school. Population in 1881, 1,267.

About a mile hence is CROSSLEE, once participating in the prosperity enjoyed by different places in the parish as the seat of manufactures, but latterly almost deserted, owing to the destruction by fire of a large cotton mill, in which many hands were employed. The united parish is about six miles in length by three in breadth. The low grounds are in general fertile and beautified by some fine natural tracts of wood. Acreage of the parish of Houston and Kilellan, 7,585; population of Crosslee in 1881, 496.

The parish of ERSKINE is six miles in length and from three to four in breadth, situate on the Clyde, opposite to Kilpatrick, and about 6 miles N.W. from Paisley. The ground rises gently from the river, and is laid out in rich plantations, orchards and corn fields. Erskine House, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is a beautiful mansion, seated amidst tasteful pleasure grounds facing the Clyde. The Glasgow and Greenock section of the Caledonian Railway passes through the parish. Erskine, it is said, is the oldest ferry on the Clyde. Acreage, 7,535; population in 1881, 1,653.

BISHOPTON is a small village in Erskine parish, on the Glasgow and Greenock road, 12 miles W.S.W. from the former place, and 10¼ E.S.E. from the latter. There is a place of worship belonging to the Free church, and a Board school. Brick making is carried on to some extent, and may be said to constitute the only approach to manufacturing in the village. The Greenock section of the Caledonian line passes near to the village, for which it has a station.

JOHNSTONE,

ELDERSLIE, KILBARCHAN, MILLIKEN PARK, AND CARTSIDE.

JOHNSTONE is a very considerable manufacturing town, within the landward part of the abbey parish of Paisley, 3¾ miles W. from that town, 10 W. from Glasgow, 8 N. from Beith, and 14 S.E. from Greenock, most agreeably situated, contiguous to the Black Cart river. The increase of population in this locality has been very remarkable. In 1782 it contained but ten persons. The system of feuing was then commenced here, and since that period it has been progressively increasing up to the present time. Trade and commerce have likewise kept pace with the augmentation of its population, there being now in the neighbourhood two large cotton mills, a large paper mill, iron foundries, engineering, machine and tool manufactories, &c. The extensive linen thread mills of Messrs. Finlayson, Bousfield & Co., which give employment to over 2,000 hands, are situated here, as are also four branch banking establishments. There were at one time upwards of 300 hand-loom weavers here, but this trade is now entirely extinct. Contiguous to the town are several valuable iron, coal and shale mines. The town, which is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water, is very regularly laid out, having good streets, with two spacious squares, one of which forms a market place ; the houses are for the most part substantially constructed, and the shops are numerous and well stocked. The new burgh buildings, a fine stone structure situated in Collier street, and erected at a cost of £2,000, was opened on the 28th September, 1888. The court room is a spacious and well fitted-up apartment, ornamented with the coat of arms of the burgh in relief. In the Commissioners' room is a full-length portrait of the late Sir William M. Napier, Bart., presented to him by his tenants, and handed over to the burgh by Sir Archibald Lennox M. Napier, Bart., in November, 1887. The Glasgow and South-Western railway passes the town, and affords direct communication with all parts of the country. The Glasgow, Paisley and Johnstone Canal, eleven miles in length, was projected with the intention of running through the valley of the Black Cart to Ardrossan. It reached Johnstone and was opened in 1810, but the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company afterwards forming their line along the projected course, there was no necessity for continuing the canal farther. The railway company subsequently acquired possession of and used it for goods traffic only, but an Act of Parliament having been obtained to close it, a railway has now been made along its site. From an eminence on the Paisley road Johnstone has a pleasing appearance ; to the left, at a short distance, stands Johnstone Castle, surrounded by thriving plantations, commanding a fine view of the country for many miles round. To the west, immediately beyond the river Cart, is a delightful residence, until recently the seat of Sir Robert Napier. Johnstone possesses nothing to invite the antiquarian or amuse the traveller ; but curiosity may be gratified by a visit to the village of ELDERSLIE (a mile east of this place), once the residence of the renowned Wallace.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Scottish Episcopal church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The public institutions are the Johnstone Working Men's Institute, containing a news room, a public hall capable of holding 1,000 people, and which contains a very fine organ, the gift of Mr. Bousfield, late of the firm of Finlayson, Bousfield & Co., of this place, with Mechanics' Institute, and bible, missionary, and friendly societies. Two schools have been erected under the Scotch Education Act, capable of affording accommodation for upwards of 1,000 children ; besides these, there are also a Roman Catholic school and a school for factory children. Horse fairs are held on the Thursday after the second Monday of July and first Friday in January, and a cattle and pleasure fair in the middle of July, which lasts for three days. Population in 1871, 7,538, and in 1881, 9,267.

KILBARCHAN is a manufacturing town, in the parish of its name, one mile and a half W. from Johnstone, and about 5 miles W. from Paisley, situate on the southern declivity of a hill, and pretty regularly built. Upwards of 1,000 looms are employed in this place and its immediate vicinity in the manufacture of silk, cotton, shawls, robes, &c. In the centre of the town is a school-house, with a tower, on which is the statute of Habbie Simpson, the well-known Scotch piper, born in this parish. It was executed by Archibald Robertson, a young sculptor from Greenock. The places of worship are the parish church and a United Presbyterian church. Gas was introduced by a company in 1846, and the town is now well lighted. There are two public libraries containing several thousand volumes, and a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. A horse fair is held annually on the first Tuesday in December (old style). Acreage of the parish, 9,006; population in 1881, 6,868, the town numbering 2,548.

LOCHWINNOCH,

NEW TOWN OF BELTREES AND HOW-WOOD.

LOCHWINNOCH is a large village in the parish of its name, 15½ miles s.w. from Glasgow, 8½ s.s.w. from Paisley, 6½ s.s.w. from Johnstone, and 3½ N. from Beith. The Glasgow and South-Western Railway has a station close to the town. The village is situated on the north-west bank of the beautiful lake from which it derives its appellation, and surrounded by scenery of a most interesting and romantic character, highly attractive to the tourist; among which the lovely loch, the banks of the Calder, the sublime cataract of Reckan Linn, the bottomless Gurratt's Linn, the Cald r Glen, and the remains of several old castles, are all eminently worthy of a visit from the stranger to these parts. The lake, which stretches in a northerly and southerly direction, lies in the eastern part of the parish; it receives the Calder water on its west side, and its issue forms the Black Cart River; it is about two miles in length by one in breadth, but was formerly much more extensive, having been contracted by an embankment, whereby several hundred acres of land have been reclaimed and brought into cultivation. On the north-west side of the loch stands Castle Semple House, the seat of James Widdrington Shand-Harvey, Esq., the situation of which is in the highest degree picturesque; it occupies the site of the ancient castle of Semple, founded by Lord John Semple about the year 1500; it was demolished in 1735. On a small island in the lake is the "Peel," the remains of some forgotten stronghold, of which nothing but a vault now exists. Lochwinnoch possesses some claims to notice as a place of manufactures, and contains the extensive cabinet and chair manufactories of Messrs. Hunter, Hamilton & Crawford, and Joseph Johnstone, which, together give employment to a large number of hands, a bleach-field, a steam laundry, &c. There is also established here a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The village is ornamented by a parochial church having a handsome steeple; also a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. Justice of peace courts are held here on the first Tuesday of each month. There is an annual fair, called the "Fair of Hill," which is held on the first Tuesday in November (old style). The parish of Lochwinnoch, which embraces 19,507 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 3,369; of this number 1,192 belonged to the village.

HOW-WOOD is a small village in the parish of Lochwinnoch, 3¼ miles from that town, situate on the high road between Beith and Glasgow. In the neighbourhood are two bleach works. About a mile and a half nearer to Lochwinnoch, in that parish, is a place called NEW TOWN OF BELTREES, another small village, neither of which contain any object worthy of particular description. In 1881 How-wood had a population of 333.

MEARNS, WITH BUSBY AND NEWTON.

MEARNS is a village in the parish of its name, 7 miles S. from Glasgow, 8 S.E. from Paisley, and about 3½ S.W. from Clarkston station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line. The parish lies in the south-eastern part of the county, and extends seven miles in length by about three in breadth. The surface of the land is finely diversified by pleasing undulations, rising gradually from east to west; it is generally fertile, and adapted to the purposes of the dairy, whilst other portions of the district afford excellent pasturage. The great road from Glasgow to Ayr and Kilmarnock runs through the whole length of the parish; and a road has been opened from Glasgow, which, passing Newton joins the former one a little beyond the King's Well Inn. In the parish are several bleachfields, and at BUSBY, a small romantic village in this parish, 6 miles S. from Glasgow, are calico printing works, a bleachfield, and chemical and starch works. At NEWTON, another village in Mearns parish, 3 miles from GIFFNOCK, a station on the Glasgow and Kilbride line, stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, with a handsome spire, in which is an excellent clock; the interior contains 700 sittings. There is also a church for United Presbyterians, which will seat a congregation of 500 persons. A Board school has been erected to accommodate about 500 children. The village of Mearns is well built and of pleasing appearance; it possesses a superior inn, and a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. The only object of antiquity in the parish is the castle of Mearns, near the village. It is a large square tower, seated on a rocky eminence, commanding an extensive and beautiful prospect; it is encompassed by a strong wall, and the entrance appears to have been secured by a drawbridge. This interesting relic of former times is now out of repair and dismantled; it belongs to Sir R. M. Shaw-Stewart, Bart., of Ardgowan, but its origin is lost in obscurity. The parish is adorned by several elegant modern seats and mansions; and the lands are irrigated and refreshed by the waters of three lakes, one of which, named Black Loch, is nearly two miles and a half in circumference. The parish, which embraces 10,281 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 3,965.

PAISLEY,

WITH BALACLAVA, CLIPPENS, INKERMAN, LINWOOD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PAISLEY is a parliamentary burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, in the parish of the Abbey of Paisley, 53 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, about seven S. by W. from Glasgow, and 17 S.E. from Greenock. This active manufacturing town, so distinguished for the beauty of its shawls and muslins, and its extensive fabrication of thread, stands in a healthful and picturesque situation on the banks of the White Cart, about three miles above the confluence of that river with the Clyde, and enjoys the advantages of railway communication, being connected with Glasgow, Greenock, Kilmarnock, Ayr, &c., by the iron road. The Burgh, or Old Town, of Paisley, is on the western side of the river; the New Town on the eastern side. The High Church, with its lofty spire, rises from a fine eminence, the south side of which, and its summit, are covered with buildings and its northern slope is laid out in gardens. This central ridge forms a natural terrace, which runs westward from the river nearly half a mile, terminating abruptly at a point where the Romans had a fort and fortified camp, whence is a prospect extensive and beautiful. With this camp several minor stations are believed to have had communication, each placed on the summit of a neighbouring eminence, such as Woodside, the Knock and Castlehead; while the name of "Causeyside," still retained by one of the streets of the burgh, is thought to indicate the former existence of a Roman road, leading to or by the principal station.

Paisley is generally supposed to have been the Vandnara of Ptolemy, a notion supported by the etymology of the name of Vandnara—the British words wen dur signifying the "white water," and thus expressing the present distinctive appellation of the river on the banks of which the town is built. In ancient days, Paisley was distinguished only for its abbey, and the shrine of Saint Mirin, which it enclosed, was resorted to by multitudes of pilgrims from all parts of Scotland; Saints James, Mirin, and Milburge divided the tutelary honours. This great and opulent monastic establishment was founded in the year 1163, by Walter, great steward of Scotland, and son of Allan, the first of the Stewarts, who, for a long period, made this abbey their family mausoleum. The religious order of the Cluni where the first occupants. It was originally a priory, but was afterwards elevated to the rank of an abbey, its lands being by James II. erected into a regality, of which the abbot was lord. By Abbot George Schaw, in 1484, the abbey precincts were surrounded by a lofty wall of hewn stone, a mile in circumference, the greater part of which has been demolished; still a portion of it remains, as does an inscription setting forth, in quaint rhyme, Abbot Schaw as its builder. This inscription was on a tablet in the wall, and is now inserted in a house in Lawn street. In 1560, the Reformation having taken place, the abbey and lands were made a temporal barony in favour of Lord Claud Hamilton third son of the Duke of Chatelherault, and onwhom was conferred the title of Lord Paisley. The abbey lands having been transferred in 1652 from the Earl of Abercorn to the Earl of Angus, and from him in 1653 to Lord Dundonald, the greater portion became the property, by purchase, of the Marquis of Abercorn in 1764, who intended to have kept it entire as a residence, but finding if had become much dilapidated, he let it on building leases; so that the park, orchards, and gardens of the abbey subsequently became the site of the new town of Paisley, and the stones from the walls form a portion of the materials of which the houses were built.

The abbey church, mutilated as it now is, constitutes the most interesting public structure of which Paisley can boast. The nave, which in the interior exhibits three tiers of arches, is neatly fitted up, and contains some curious monuments and sepulchral inscriptions. It is the parochial church of an extensive rural district lying around the town, and called the "Parish of the Abbey of Paisley." The choir is levelled to within a few feet of the ground, the north transept is more entire, and displays in its large, well-proportioned northern window a striking relic of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence. Three windows of good size and elegant design, with a recessed doorway, form the principal ornaments of the western front, and during the past year or two a number of ornamental stained windows have been added in memory of some of the best families in the town and district. Near the abbey is a Gothic chapel, built in 1499, and dedicated to Saints Columba and Mirin, and now used as a place of sepulture for the Abercorn family. The remarkable degree of resonance possessed by this little building (which is still, from the circumstance, called the sounding aisle) has been magnified by most writers. Much of the effect which it formerly produced is now, however, lost, from the re-construction within the chapel of a large altar tomb, consecrated to the memory of Marjory Bruce, wife of the great steward Walter, mother of Robert II. The aperture in the brickwork, formed to close up the interstices of a once beautiful eastern window, likewise contributed to weaken the echo. It is not improbable that, for some time after the suppression of its abbey, Paisley languished, and when Crawford—the first regular historian of Renfrewshire—produced his learned and useful work, the town consisted of no more than one principal street and a few narrow lanes or wynds branching from it. Its population did not at that time exceed 3,000—nay, some assert that its inhabitants were then only about 1,500 in number.

The portion called the Old Town is considerably more extensive than the new, and contains all the chief warehouses of the manufacturers. Many of its streets are well built, and there are three parallel lines running from east to west of very great length. The New Town, comprising many streets, occupies a level surface on the eastern side of the Cart. Of both portions of the town, the entire length can scarcely be less than two miles; while the extreme breadth of Paisley, from north to south, must reach at least a mile and a half. East, north, and west of it are suburbs with distinct names, such as Williamsburgh, Dovesland, Lylesland, Carriage Hill, Charleston, Maxwellton, Ferguslie, Castle Head, Mciklerigg, Mossvale and Millarston. The eastern and western parts of the town are connected by three bridges, two of which are of recent construction; one of them has had its named changed from Sneddon bridge to that of Abercorn bridge. The old stone bridge at the foot of High Street has been widened and made to harmonise with its new neighbour. The large arch carrying the railway across the river is close to the new Abercorn bridge. Great alterations are being effected in every quarter of the town; old houses are being removed to make room for handsome public buildings and modern dwellings, the narrow streets widened, and the outskirts of the town extended by the erection of terraces and cottages. Two most important improvements are now (1888) nearing completion: these are the deepening of the White Cart—for which borrowing powers for £100,000 were obtained from Parliament in 1885—and the construction of a new railway station to cost about £150,000. Between 1786 and 1791 the above river was, at an expense of £4,000, made navigable to the town for sloops of 40 to 50 tons burthen, and in 1842 attempts were made with dredging machines to deepen it, so as to admit of vessels of greater burthen, but it was then found impracticable. The Glasgow and Johnstone canal, which at one time had a flourishing trade, has been acquired by the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Co. and is now closed, a new line of railway having been laid along its course. The George A. Clark Town Hall is regarded as one of the most magnificent halls in Scotland, the cost of its erection being not less than £100,000. It is called after one of the Brothers Clark, who some years ago bequeathed £40,000 for its erection, the deficiency between this sum and its cost having, in a princely manner, been subscribed for by the three surviving brothers of the Clark family, whose names deserve lasting remembrance by a grateful community. These are James, William John, and Stewart. The eldest brother, James, died a few months before the hall was opened. The venerable mother of the family bequeathed some four or five thousand pounds to furnish an organ for the hall, which was erected by an eminent London firm, Messrs. Bryceson Brothers and Ellis; it is a four manual instrument, and is the finest organ in Scotland, except that in the college of Edinburgh. The hall was formally opened on the 30th of January, 1882, on which occasion the Messrs. Clark invited to a conversazione 1,200 of the elite of Paisley, and of many other towns in Scotland. A procession of all the trades took place during the day, and surpassed in magnificence any other procession ever known in the district. It was a condition of Mr. Clark that the hall should be erected in the New Town, that being the district in which he was born, in 1823. The erection stands on the margin of the river Cart, and contains a chime of bells in the tower, which, by ingenious mechanism, play 35 tunes, varied each day of the month. Another magnificent edifice which now forms a valuable addition to Paisley's many fine specimens of architecture is the new Sheriff Court House, in St. James street, built in the Italian style, at a cost to the county of about £15,000. The court hall in the rear has accommodation for about 300 persons, exclusive of that for magistrates, jurors, reporters, &c. There is also special accommodation for male and female witnesses, and judge and jury retiring rooms. The building also contains offices, &c. for the sheriff clerk and procurator fiscal. It was formally opened on June 30th, 1885. The latest architectural ornament to the town is the Campbell School, which is situated on an eminence, and will accommodate 2,300 children. This is the largest elementary school in Scotland, and the third largest in the kingdom. There is also in course of erection an elegant church in memory of the deceased philanthropist, Thomas Coats, Esq. A most conspicuous public edifice is the County Buildings, a large towered, turreted, and embattled fabric, comprehending a variety of rooms and offices for county and burgh meetings, others for public functionaries, and a prison chapel, erected in 1820. The county gaol until recently formed part of this building; but the prisoners having been transferred to Glasgow, the gaol is now used as a bridewell. Between the noble pile which forms the front edifice and the prison in its rear are two courts for exercise and air. By a charter granted by James IV. in 1488, in favour of Abbot George Schaw, Paisley was created a burgh of barony. The fourth centenary of Paisley as a burgh was celebrated in August, 1888. Her Majesty the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Henry of Battenberg, graced the ceremony by her presence, and received a most loyal reception. This was the first visit of royalty to the town during the long period of 271 years. The present municipal body consists of a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, and ten councillors, with a town clerk, procurator fiscal, and chamberlain. The provost and bailies act as justices of the peace. Paisley returns one member to the Legislature, the present representative being W. B. Barbour, Esq. of Paisley and London. Gas was first introduced in 1824, and all the streets are illuminated with it, and the town is well supplied with water.

A young lady of some historical notoriety was the original cause of Paisley becoming a manufacturing town. In 1697, a daughter of the Laird of Bargarren, aged eleven years, named Christina Shaw, preferred a charge of bewitching her against a servant girl, with whom she had quarrelled, and nineteen alleged confederates, seven of whom were condemned, and six of the number burnt on Gallow green, Paisley. The inciter to this detestable act of superstitious cruelty subsequently acquired great skill in spinning fine yarn. Her first production having been sold very advantageously at Bath by Lady Blantyre to the lace makers, stimulated Miss Shaw to extend her transactions by availing herself of the co-operation of a relative in Holland. The demand for this thread soon become great, and the most extensive manufacturers that arose in Scotland at that period acknowledged "the bewitched lady" as their originator. She afterwards became the wife of the minister of Kilmaurs. Coarse linen checks were the first fabrics produced by the Paisley looms; to these succeeded others of a lighter kind, such as lawns, both figured and plain. Silk gauze then took the lead, about the year 1760, and Spitalfields soon yielded to its more successful competitor, for such was the celebrity of Paisley gauze that warehouses were engaged for its sale in London, Dublin, and Paris. The produce of this article, together with sewing thread, lawn and linen gauze, amounted for the year 1784 to £579,000, and more than 26,000 persons were employed in their fabrication. But the demand for the popular gauze rapidly decreased, and soon became insignificant. Muslin, cambric and cotton thread were the next productions of Paisley industry and skill; to these succeeded silk and cotton shawls, scarfs and plaids composed of silk and merino wool. These still continue to exhibit the ingenuity and taste of the Paisley weavers, and in the manufacture of them they have arrived at great perfection. In Paisley and its neighbourhood are numerous thread and cotton spinning mills, bleaching and printing works, dyehouses, power loom factories, iron and brass foundries, engineers' and millwrights' shops, timber yards, a brewery, distilleries, soap, starch and corn flour manufactories, and a very extensive tannery. There are seven banking establishments; these are branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the British Linen Co. the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Royal Bank of Scotland: Two newspapers are published in Paisley, viz., the Express daily, and the Paisley and Renfrewshire Gazette weekly.

Paisley contains nine churches connected with the Establishment—viz, the Abbey, the High Church, St. George's, the Martyrs', the North, the South, the Middle, and the Gaelic, now known as St. Columba church, and Greenlaw. There are seven Free churches, one of which has a service in Gaelic every Sabbath forenoon, eight United Presbyterian, one Reformed Presbyterian, one Episcopalian, one Congregationalist, three Baptist, one Methodist, one Original Secession, one Reformed Church of England, one New Jerusalem, one Evangelical Union, and two Roman Catholic. The situation of each and the names of their respective ministers will be found on a subsequent page. Many charitable institutions and schools are liberally maintained by the inhabitants of Paisley. Among them the Infirmary, the Town Hospital or Poorhouse, the Philosophical Institution and Humane Society, Hutcheson's Charity School, the Industrial School, Roman Catholic School, Sabbath school, and several excellent schools under the Paisley School Board. Of the Board schools these most worthy of notice are the Grammar School and Academy, in which several of the higher branches of education are taught; and five elementary schools are situated in the north, north-west, east, south, and west districts of the town respectively. These are handsome and commodious buildings. The John Neilson Educational Institution, richly endowed by the late John Neilson, Esq. (a citizen of Paisley), was opened in 1852. It is a handsome, massive structure, surmounted by a lofty dome, and from its elevated position, on which the Roman camp was placed, is a conspicuous ornament to the town. There are some friendly associations, Bible and missionary societies, a Free Library and Museum, the gift to the town of Sir Peter Coats, of Woodside, and Thomas Coats's Observatory. Public reading rooms for the working classes have been established by some of the principal manufacturers in different parts of the town. In Gilmour street is a handsome structure, erected in 1847, as a Government School of Design. The Paisley National Security Savings Bank occupies premises in Gilmour street formerly used as a public coffee and reading room. There is a theatre and a music hall, the latter being opened occasionally; and races are held annually in August on a picturesque course half a mile from the town, near the Greenock road. This ground, comprising 40 acres of land, round which is the race course, has, by Act of Parliament, become the property of the community, and is now named St. James's Park. One of the finest ornaments to the town are the Fountain Gardens, which were the noble gift of Thomas Coats, Esq., of Ferguslie House. They extend between Love street and Caledonia street, are tastefully laid out, and contain every necessary for the convenience and comfort of the public. The ground is six acres in extent. A large and ornamental fountain is fixed in the centre, and a smaller one at each of the four angles of the gardens. A workhouse was erected in 1850. It occupies a commanding situation in the upper part of the town. The style is Elizabethan, and there is accommodation for six hundred inmates. Adjoining is the Lunatic Asylum, built in the same style, and capable of containing ninety-eight patients. In the immediate neighbourhood is the Burgh or Riccartsbar Asylum, a large handsome building, which, from its elevated position, forms a prominent feature on the south side of the town. It cost £24,000. Near to this asylum is the Brodie Park, a farm containing 26 acres, bequeathed to the town council of Paisley about 20 years ago by the late Mr. Brodie, on behalf of the community, for all time.

Paisley may boast of having been the birthplace or residence of several individuals noted for genius or science. Wilson, the celebrated American ornithologist, and Tannahill, the lyric poet, were natives of Paisley; and the distinguished Dr. Witherspoon, long minister of one of the parishes, wrote several of his best works here, prior to his emigration. Here the celebrated John Wilson (Christopher North) was born. The country around Paisley (except on the north, where a wide-spread fertile plain expands itself, known by the name of "Carse of Renfrewshire") is most agreeably diversified by gentle risings, by wood, by water, and, in short, by all the constituents of the soft and beautiful. A fall in the Cart, just above the town, deserves mention.

The weekly market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the third Thursdays of February and May, and the second Thursday of August and November respectively. February and August are the principal for cattle; August fair and races take place at the same date, and last for three days. Those of May and November are mostly for hiring servants. According to the returns for 1871, the population of the town was 48,257, and in 1881, 55,642; but it is now (1888) computed to be 65,000.

LINWOOD is a pleasant village in the parish of Kilbarchan, situated on the river Cart, distant about 3 miles W. from Paisley, its post town. Paper making and cotton spinning are extensively carried on here, and several coal and ironstone pits are wrought, and the manufacturing of shale oil is carried on in the neighbourhood. The religious and educational establishments are an Established church and a day school. Population in 1881, 1,393.

INKERMAN, BALACLAVA, and CLIPPENS are mining villages between 2 and 3 miles W. from Paisley, their post town. The two former places sprung into existence about the time of the Crimean war, and are named in commemoration of the noted battles. They contained a population of over 1,000, but this number has been reduced because of the decline in the mining industry.

PORT GLASGOW, KILMALCOLM AND LANGBANK.

PORT GLASGOW is a seaport and opulent burgh of barony and regality, pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Clyde, 20 miles N.W. from Glasgow, and 3 E. from Greenock, on the Greenock section af the Caledonian line of railway. It is protected on the south by a range of high hills, and an extensive view of corresponding eminences presents itself on the north. The lower grounds in the vicinity of the town are embellished with handsome villas, to which are generally attached excellent gardens. The town stands immediately contiguous to the old barony and village of Newark, at the eastern extremity of which is the ancient castle formerly occupied by the barons of the name of Maxwell, now the property of Sir M. Shaw-Stewart, Bart. It is a fine old ruin, in good preservation, and the situation is much admired for its commanding view of the Clyde and adjacent picturesque scenery, particularly that wild and singularly-formed rocky eminence on which Dumbarton Castle stands. Port Glasgow is neatly built, the streets running at right angles. It possesses a Town House (erected in 1815, at a cost of nearly £12,000), comprising a council chamber, court hall, police station, and offices for the accommodation of the town clerk, fiscal and other public officers. This pile of buildings, which is of the finest Grecian architecture, is surmounted by an elegant spire one hundred and fifty feet in height, and adorned with a good clock. The Town Hall, situated in Princes street, is a stone structure of imposing exterior, and affords ample accommodation for public meetings, &c. The Custom House is a handsome building, and contains offices and rooms for the different officers in that branch of the revenue. The Moffat Library, containing library, reading, billiard and smoking rooms, is an elegant building at the north end of King street, erected in 1887, from part of a bequest of £8,000 left by the late James Moffat, merchant, Port Glasgow. From the same bequest the Carnegie Orphanage is at present (1888) being built, at the east end of the town. The trade of Port Glasgow has been for many years gradually improving; the tonnage employed in the American trade is very considerable, and there is a fair share of Indian and general imports. It has the superior advantage of an extensive wet dock, constructed at great expense. The harbours, which are large and commodious, are remarkable for their facility of entry and egress, and are accessible to vessels of the largest tonnage at all times of the tide. Contiguous to the harbours is a large graving dock, the first of the kind constructed in Scotland, and which since its construction has been enlarged and improved at a very considerable cost. Connected with the town are six shipbuilding establishments, some of them upon an extensive scale, and giving employment to many hands. There are also various branches of manufacture established here, consisting principally of saw mills, roperies, sail cloth factories, engineers, and sail and block makers.

Port Glasgow formerly belonged to the parish of Newark. In 1695 it was erected into a separate parochial district, and in 1775 the town was constituted a burgh of barony, and its government confided to a provost, two magistrates and seven councillors; it joins with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is Stephen Williamson, Esq. A burgh police court sits every Thursday, and a justice of peace court on alternate Mondays. Through the public spirit of the inhabitants a new parish church was erected upon the the site of old one. In external appearance it is handsome, and its interior is chaste, elegant and convenient. There are also a quoad sacra parish church, three Free churches, three for United Presbyterians, and a place of worship each for Episcopalians and Roman Catholics. Three new schools have recently been erected, two by the School Board, at a cost of over £14 000, situated in Jean street and at Clune Park, and the other in Balfour street, built by the Roman Catholics, at a cost of £6,000. There is an annual fair, which takes place on the first Thursday in July, and continues for three days. The population in 1881 was 13,294.

KILMALCOLM is a village situated on the east side of the parish of its name, on the road from the Bridge of Weir to Port Glasgow, 10 miles N.W. from Paisley, 7 S.E. from Greenock, and rather more than that distance in the same direction from Johnstone. It is an agricultural district intersected by the Gryffe and Duchal streams, whose banks are well cultivated. Consequent upon the opening of the Greenock and Ayrshire Railway, which has a station in the village, this district has become a favourite summer residence. Its situation is sheltered, and the salubrity of its atmosphere is highly spoken of. A large number of tasteful villas have been erected, a number of shops of a superior class have been opened, and a Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established here. There is also an excellent modern hotel (the Buchanan Arms), close to the station, which affords ample accommodation for visitors. The village is well lighted with gas. The Kilmalcolm Hydropathic Establishment and Sanatorium is a fine building, standing 450 feet above the sea level, and commands an extensive view. From the tower are seen Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi, and the whole range of Cowal hills from the Gareloch, on the Clyde, to Goatfell, in Arran. The grounds extend to upwards of 22 acres. Population in 1881, 1 170.

LANGBANK is a small village in the parish of Erskine, about 3 miles S. E. from Port Glasgow. It is pleasantly situated on the Clyde, and is rapidly growing into favour as a country residence. A church under the Establishment, and also one for United Presbyterians, both modern erections, are in the village. The former is a plain stone edifice with bell tower, whilst the latter has greater pretentions to architectural beauty, being ornamented with a tower and spire of considerable elevation. There is a good Board school in the village, and a station on the Greenock section of the Caledonian railway. Population in 1881, 322.

RENFREW, WITH INCHINNAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RENFREW is an ancient town and royal burgh, the capital of the county and parish of its name; 50 miles W. from Edinburgh, 13 E. by S. from Port Glasgow, 6 W. from Glasgow, and 3 N. from Paisley; situated a short distance from the Clyde, and one mile east from the river Cart. In the year 1396 Renfrew received its charter from Robert III., and in 1614 James VI. granted a charter for a school. In old charters the name of this place is variously written Ranfrew, Ranfrew, and, as it is now spelt, Renfrew; it is composed of two British words, ren (or rhyn), a point or promontory, and frew, a flux or flow—implying a point of land which cleaves the flowing tide into two streams; one continues its course up the Clyde, the other pursuing its way up the Cart. The word "Renfrew" hence means the tidal cape, or peninsula. Walter, the first Stewart, built a castle here, on a small height called Castle-hill, on the margin of the bank of the Clyde; and Renfrew was an early and favourite residence of the Stewarts, long ere they ascended the Scottish throne. The present town consists of one long street, from which several smaller ones issue. There are established two extensive ironfounding and engineering establishments and ship building yards, with slips capable of raising vessels of large burthen. The town is well lighted with gas. There is a commodious and substantial wharf, at which the largest vessels that frequent the river can discharge and load with the same facility as at Glasgow. The main line of the Paisley and Renfrew railway is connected with this wharf, where passengers embark and land from the different steam boats navigating the Clyde, and goods are shipped and discharged by the Liverpool, Irish, and other boats.

As a royal burgh, Renfrew is governed by a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. It joins with Port Glasgow (and other places there named) in returning one member to Parliament. The vicinity of the town is adorned by some fine estates and mansions; of the latter, the most worthy of the stranger's notice are Elderslie, the residence of A. A. Speirs, Esq., and Blythswood, the seat of Sir Archibald Campbell, both situated on the banks of the Clyde, and their beauty increased by delightful plantations. A magistrates' court sits every Monday; and quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and last Tuesday in October. The places of worship are an Established church, one for the United Presbyterians, a Free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a public Grammar school, and a school for Roman Catholics in the burgh. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in May and the last Friday in June. The acreage of the parish is 4,311, and the population in 1881 was 7,439, of which the town contained 4,855.

The parish of INCHINNAN is situated to the north-west of Renfrew, and is watered by the Clyde, the White Cart, and the Gryffe rivers. At the confluence of the two latter streams is a fine bridge of ten arches, forming a communication with Renfrew; to enable vessels navigating between Paisley and the Clyde to pass this bridge, a canal has been cut, across which is a handsome iron swing bridge. The road from Glasgow to Greenock passes through the whole length of this parish. Acreage, 3,930; population in 1881, 508.

POST OFFICE, 50 Hairst Street, RENFREW, Robert Duncan, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Paisley) at 5 40 and 8 30 a.m., and (from Glasgow) at 1 49 and 5 49 p.m., and are despatched to Paisley at 2 10 p.m., and to Glasgow at 11 55 a.m. and 3 55 and 7 55 p.m.—Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

WEMYSS BAY, SKELMORLIE (Ayrshire), AND INVERKIP.

WEMYSS BAY, in the parish of Inverkip, six miles s.w. from Greenock, is beautifully situated on the banks of the Clyde. It is fast rising into notice as a watering place. Many respectable families have taken up their residence here, and a number of handsome villas have been erected, all of which are well tenanted in the summer season. There is an English Episcopal church and a chapel belonging to the Roman Catholics. The Caledonian Railway Company has a terminal station here, on their Wemyss Bay section, and their steamers call to take in passengers for Largs, Millport, Fairlie, Rothesay, and other places. The Clydesdale Bank, Limited, has a branch in the village.

SKELMORLIE (Ayrshire) is immediately connected with Wemyss Bay, and vies with it in beauty of situation and popularity as a summer resort. The houses are generally of a superior class, and a few respectable shops are established. Gas works have also been erected. A hydropathic institution is in operation, under the superintendence of Dr. Currie. It is romantically situated upon a cliff, rising to a perpendicular height of 110 feet above the shore road. From the windows magnificent views may be obtained of the Arran hills, away down the estuary, the Island of Bute, and Rothesay Bay, the entrance to the Kyles of Bute, and Loch Striven. A church in connection with the Establishment and one for United Presbyterians are the places of worship.

INVERKIP is a village in the parish of its name, four miles s.w. from Greenock, situated on the Kipp water, which intersects the district from east to west, and falls into the Clyde. The village is sometimes called the "Auld Kirk." The Daff and some other rivulets irrigate the district. In their course they are broken into small cascades, which produce a pleasing effect, and the meadows through which they pass are finely embanked. Ardgowan House, the seat of Sir Michael Robert Shaw-Stewart, Bart., is pleasantly situated on a kind of peninsula, a little north of the village. It is a fine modern building, surrounded with beautiful and romantic pleasure grounds. Besides the parish church, which is a neat and handsome edifice, surmounted by a spire, with a clock, there is a Free church and one for Episcopalians, and there is also a Board school in the village. Communication with other towns is rendered easy by means of the Wemyss Bay section of the Caledonian railway, which has a station here. Acreage of the parish, 12,549. Population in 1881, 5,359, and of the village 580.

ROSS & CROMARTY SHIRES.

ROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a large section in the north of Scotland, being eighty miles in length and nearly the same in breadth (exclusive of the Island of Lewis), extending from the German Ocean to the Atlantic. On the North it is bounded by Sutherlandshire, on the south by Inverness-shire, on the east by the German Ocean and the small county of Cromarty, and on the west by the Western Sea; on the east coast the county terminates in an obtuse point, and on this side it is deeply penetrated by the Bay of Cromarty; the western shore is laid open by many gulfs or arms of the sea, the waters of which roll far within the land. From the numerous indentations made by lakes and firths, the form of Ross-shire is of a most irregular character. The main land (exclusive of Cromartyshire) is computed to contain about 1,850,800 acres, and Lewis Isle, 359,000; of the first number, 5,900 belong to the district of Ferintosh, a part of the county of Nairn.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The portion of this extensive county capable of cultivation is very small. The arable lands extend along the eastern coast, and are found in patches here and there on the western; a great proportion of the low lands of Easter Ross, and a small portion of those near Dingwall, is loamy clay, the rest being light soil of various qualities. The whole of this comprehensive shire, except a district on the east side called Easter Ross, is mountainous, wild and pastoral; the mountains are for the most parts in groups, many of them reaching a considerable elevation. Ben Wyvis is considered the most lofty, rising upwards of 3,700 feet above the level of the sea. Almost the whole of the west coast presents magnificent mountain scenery, and the interior is in general picturesque. The climate of this county is unsteady, and exhibits the extremes of long, dreary, cold winters, and some very hot summer weather; the west coast is subject to heavy rains. The natural forests, which formerly covered large tracts, have nearly all disappeared, with the exception of the birch and some oaks in different parts of the county; the remains of firwood are extensive, and the trunks of oaks of an immense size are still to be seen. Planting is prosecuted with great spirit, large additions having been in progress for many years. The improvements effected in farming within the last sixty years have completely changed the aspect of the district of Easter Ross, and indeed this portion as well as other parts of the county may now compete in the skilful management of the land with any other division in Scotland. The chief cereals cultivated are wheat, barley, and oats. The mineralogy of the shire is interesting to the geologist, but of little value in a directly useful point of view. Limestone occurs in several localities on the west coast, but there is a general destitution of coal throughout the county. The salmon fishery is carried on to a considerable extent in the different rivers and estuaries, and that for herrings is pursued with moderate success, the takes of this fish having of late years become uncertain. There are no manufactures of any importance, but in the neighbourhood of Dingwall, Invergordon and Tain several extensive distilleries are established.

RIVERS, LAKES AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers on the east side of the county are the Conan, which flows into the Cromarty Firth, and the Oikel and the Carron, which pass into the Dornoch Firth. The largest stream on the west coast is the Ewe, which has a short course from Loch Maree. The Conan and its principal branch, the Raney (or Blackwater), form some falls of considerable height and beauty. The indentations of the sea, or saltwater lakes, on the west coast proceeding from north to south, are Loch Enard, Loch Broom, Loch Grienord, Loch Ewe, Gair-Loch, Loch Torridon, Loch Keeshorn, Loch Carron, and Loch Alsh, with its inner southerly arm, Loch Duich. The county likewise possesses a great number of lakes of fresh water in the interior, but none of them, save Loch Maree near the west coast, are of sufficient magnitude or beauty to excite interest. The Highland Railway intersects this county. This line presents many attractions. It traverses some of the grandest scenery in the Highlands hitherto comparatively unknown, and affords the advantage of a direct communication with the west coast. No railway route in the kingdom, and probably not even on the continent, presents within the same space of time so great a variety of fine scenery. Strome Ferry is the terminus, from thence the steamers of the Company sail to the Isles of Skye and Lewis.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Ross-shire comprehends thirty complete parishes, and three parts of parishes. It has three royal burghs, namely, Dingwall, Tain, and Fortrose; the two former, with the town of Cromarty, join with Kirkwall, Wick, and Dornoch, in returning one member to Parliament, and the shires of Ross and Cromarty unite in sending another. The present member for the shires is Roderick Macdonald, Esq. M.D. The Ross parliamentary constituency numbered in 1888-89, 8,997. The burgh of Fortrose is associated with Inverness, Nairn and Forres in parliamentary representation. The Lord Lieutenant is Sir Kenneth Smith Mackenzie, Bart., of Gairloch. According to the returns for 1871 the population of the counties of Ross and Cromarty was 80,955; namely, 38,050 males, and 42,905 females; in 1881 the figures returned were:—Males, 37,027 males, females, 41,520; total, 78,547, which shows a decrease of 2,408 persons in the ten years. The valuation of the county in 1888-89 amounted to £250,801; and of railways, £15,829.

CROMARTYSHIRE.

THIS county is so amalgamated with and intersected by Ross-shire, that, as is observed by respectable authorities, "there can hardly be a literary separation of the two, as there should certainly not be a political." The greater part of it lies in the "Black Isle," or that peninsula which is bounded by the Firth of Cromarty on the north, and the Moray Firth on the south and east. The length of the district is about sixteen miles, and its average breadth between six and seven; it is computed that the superficies of the land in the county amounts altogether to about three hundred and forty square miles. Cromarty is mentioned in the fifth parliament of James V., in the year 1537, as a separate county; and the same distinction is observed in subsequent legislative acts that apply to the statistical divisions of the country; yet it has still been included in the shrievalty of Ross, and at this time the sheriff substitute holds a monthly court at Cromarty (the only town in the shire), from which the county has received its distinctive recognised title. The parliamentary constituency of this small county numbered in 1888-9 only 374; its valuation at the same date being £9,586.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—Originally, and at not a distant period, the greater part of this district presented a moorish, unprofitable surface, but in recent times agricultural improvements, extensively pursued with persevering industry and skill, have materially changed its features; the soil has been rendered generally productive—planting has been introduced, and is gradually progressing. The climate is drier and the air more genial than in the further northern and more Western Highland tracts. The culture of the land has contributed to the amelioration of the temperature of Cromartyshire, and its crops are in most seasons earlier than in many of the adjacent districts. Its mineral treasure is but scanty; freestone and granite comprise the only description worthy of notice. The fisheries on the coast are the most productive sources of the public profit and prosperity.

CROMARTY,

RESOLIS, JAMIMAVILLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CROMARTY is a burgh of barony, and the capital of its parish and county, 19½ miles N.E. from Inverness, 17 N.W. from Nairn, 11 S. from Tain, 9 N. by E. from Fortrose, and 8 W. by N. from Invergordon; situated upon a promontory jutting into the neck of the sea connecting the Moray with the Cromarty Firth, and at a short distance from the entrance into a harbour esteemed one of the safest and most capacious in Britain. In this haven—the Portus Salutis of the Romans—vesse's of any tonnage may ride in perfect security. The entrance from the sea lies between two wooded headlands, called the "Sutors of Cromarty," which almost meet and reflect each other's form, producing an effect, in combination with the general scenery, eminently picturesque. The view from the hill of Cromarty is truly delightful, and is the admiration of every visitor. Beneath the south Sutor is a profound chasm, called "Charli 's Seat," and a petrifying stream called the "Dripping Cave," both attractive natural curiosities, never overlooked by the investigating stranger or tourist. Near the north Sutor are seven sunken rocks, termed the "Kings' Sons," so named from the circumstance (according to tradition) of three kings' sons having been drowned near these rocks when on their way from Denmark, and to their memory were erected three obelisks, traced with strange characters, one in the parish of Nigg, and two in the parish of Fearn. The bay of Cromarty, which has a beautiful pebbly beach, presents ample facilities for bathing. On an eminence immediately behind the town is a monument, consisting of a column 40 feet high, surmounted by a full-size figure, to the memory of the late Hugh Miller, the eminent geologist, and author of the "Testimony of the Rocks," "Scenes and Legends," "My Schools and Schoolmasters," &c., who was a native of Cromarty. The execution of the work was by Mr. Handyside Ritchie, of Edinburgh. The herring and white fishery is prosecuted in this quarter with persevering industry and general success; large quantities are exported to foreign countries, and the remainder (with the exception of the local consumption) to the London and various home markets. The monetary transactions of the place are facilitated by branches of the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. Cromarty was anciently a royal burgh, but was disfranchised by an act of the Scottish Privy Council, in compliance with the solicitation of Sir John Urquhart, proprietor of the estate of Cromarty; it now, however, holds the rank stated above, and joins with Kirkwall, Wick, Dornoch, Tain and Dingwall in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative is J. Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The parish church, an ancient building, stands at the east of the town; a chapel for the accommodation of the Gaelic portion of the community is situated on the hill south of the town, and a Free church is the only other place of worship. In the burgh is a good public hall, recently erected by the artillery volunteers as a drill hall and place for entertainments. Cromarty parish possesses an area of 8,017 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,009, of which the burgh contained 1,360.

RESOLIS parish lies on the south side of Cromarty Firth, and consists of a portion of the peninsula called the "BLACK ISLE," being eight miles long with a breadth of three, having a coast line of about ten miles. In it is the village of JAMIMAVILLE, 4½ miles from Cromarty.

DINGWALL,

STRATHPEFFER, FODDERTY, CONTIN, KNOCKBAIN, URRAY, URQUHART, KILLEARNAN, MARYBURGH, CONON BRIDGE, MUIR OF ORD, AND AUCHTERNEED.

DINGWALL is a parish, royal burgh and market town, the latter 178 miles N.N.W. from Edinburgh, 21 N.W. from Inverness, 20 S.W. from Cromarty, 13 S.W. from Invergordon, and 9 N. from Beauly; pleasantly situated in the eastern part of Ross-shire, on a fertile plain, near the western extremity of the beautiful Firth of Cromarty, which is navigable at high water for light craft as far as the town. About three-quarters of a mile from the town is a pier, or jetty, for the convenience of vessels in discharging their cargoes or taking in freight. It is supposed that at some remote period Dingwall was much more extensive than it now is, as causeways and foundations of buildings have been found some hundreds of yards from the site of the present town. As it now exists, Dingwall is neat and well built, and consists of one main street, well paved, and a few smaller ones; it is copiously supplied with excellent water from springs above the town, and from Ussie valley to the south-west, into which it is conveyed by means of pipes. The Town House, near the centre of the burgh, is a curious old building with a spire and clock; and the church is a plain structure on the north side of the town. In the neighbourhood of the latter edifice is an obelisk, fifty-seven feet in height, erected to the memory of George, first Earl of Cromartie, who, eccentric at death as in life, in accordance with his last injunction, was buried here. Near the town formerly stood the mansion of the powerful and noble family of Ross; a rude fragment in the garden attached to a villa is now all that remains of that once princely domicile.

Dingwall was erected a royal burgh by Alexander II. and its charter was renewed by James IV.; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and ten councillors, and joins with Cromarty, Tain, Dornoch, Wick, and Kirkwall in returning one member to Parliament, and is at present represented by J. Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The town is eligibly situated for the purpose of a more extensive trade than it enjoys; its business is chiefly of a local character, manufactures, with the exception of the distilling of spirits, not having as yet found a seat here. In the High street are several handsome and spacious hotels, where the best accommodation can be obtained. In the same street are branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland. A little to the east of the town stand the County Buildings, forming a very conspicuous feature in its general appearance. They were completed in 1845 at a cost of £5,000, and contain a county room, a sheriff court room, and county clerk's and other offices, together with one of the most complete prisons for its size in the kingdom. To the east of the town is an extensive distillery, known as the Ben Wyvis Distillery, owned by the Scoth Whisky Distillers, Limited. Dingwall is surrounded by some of the most beautiful scenery in Scotland. The valley of Strathpeffer recedes to the westward, and it is as lovely as any Lowland vale; while the mountains at its head present all the rude grandeur of the Highlands. The hill on the north side of the town, a beautiful wooded declivity, will remind the traveller of the celebrated hill of Kinnoull, near Perth. About a mile and a half from Dingwall, on the road to Beauly, is the small village of MARYBURGH, seated on the left bank of the Conon, on the opposite side of which river is CONON BRIDGE, another little village. In the former village a handsome Free church and manse were erected in 1850. The market of Dingwall is held every alternate Wednesday, and the fairs on the third Wednesday in January, the third Wednesday in February, the first Wednesday in June, the first Tuesday in July, the first Wednesday in September and in November, and the Tuesday next before Christmas (new style). According to the census returns of 1881, the parliamentary and royal burgh contained a population of 1,921.

The mineral wells of STRATHPEFFER, situate at the upper extremity of a fertile valley of that name, which stretches about three miles due west from Dingwall, occasioned the erection of some twenty or thirty neat villas or cottages for the accommodation of invalid visitors, and there are three good hotels, the Ben Wyvis being one of the largest and best appointed in the North of Scotland; it contains billiard rooms and suites of private apartments. The small hamlet of AUCHTERNEED is about two miles distant from the pump room, or public lounge, attached to the principal well, and many of the adjacent farmhouses likewise furnish lodgings to strangers when their influx is great, as it generally is during the months of June, July and August. The situation of these wells is romantic, the neighbouring country being fertile and exceedingly beautiful. The springs rise through the shaly sandstone which is prevalent in this district, and at no great distance from the lofty mountain Ben Wyvis, one of the most conspicuous eminences in the North of Scotland. The waters have long been known as medicinal, and an analysis of their composition was published by Mr. Donald Munro in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1772. They were brought into considerable celebrity by Dr. Morrison, an Aberdeenshire gentleman, who was an enthusiast for their sanitary virtues, affirming them to be the strongest and most salubrious in Great Britain. They have subsequently been visited by various scientific individuals, particularly by Dr. T. Thompson, in May, 1828, who analysed the water with the most scrupulous exactness. They are strongly charged with sulphurretted hydrogen gas. Large additions have been made to the spa establishment, which is now one the most complete in Great Britian. Strathpeffer is bounded on the north by a high sandstone ridge, and on the south it is skirted by the steep green wooded acclivities of Knock-Farrel, one of the most extensive and best preserved vitrified forts (or ancient beacon hills) in the country. The public road bounds the grounds of the ancient seat of the Cromartie family, Castle Leod, a castellated mansion, still inhabited. The same road, on quitting the strath, runs by the romantic and beautifully-wooded knolls of Coul, the property of Sir Robert R. Mackenzie, Bart., and the manse, village and island plain of Contin, beyond which the visitor of this district may either wander along the picturesque shores of Loch Achilty and the sheep-walks of Comrie to the cascades of the Conon, or, holding more to the north, he will be delighted with the falls of Rogie, on the Blackwater, which flows from the upland lake and moors of Strathgarve. Nearer to the mineral spa, he may likewise be gratified with a walk through the lawns and pleasure grounds of Braham Castle, the ancient and princely residence of the Seaforth family. This beautiful seat is situated below the southern slope of Knock-Farrel, and commands an extensive, magnificent and pleasingly varied prospect, comprehending the partially wooded and cultivated courses of the river Conon and Orrin. The Dingwall and Skye Railway traverses some of the finest scenery in the Highlands, and includes views of Loch Maree, Loch Carron, Loch Luichart, Strath Carron and other districts comparatively unknown, and forms a direct communication with the west coast. Tourists by this route may reach the Isle of Skye from London in twenty-four hours, and from other parts of the kingdom in proportionately less time. The terminus is at Strome Ferry, from which point steamers in connection with the railway convey passengers to the Isle of Skye and Lewis at regularly stated times.

CONTIN is a parish joining Fodderty on the west. It is forty miles long by a mean breadth of thirty, and is distant 7 miles S.W. from Dingwall. Acreage, 179,276. Population in 1881, 1,445.

KNOCKBAIN, a small parish, 8 miles S.E. from Dingwall, is only three miles broad by five in length, and has an area of 12,035 acres. Population in 1881, 1,866.

FODDERTY parish is a very long one, being thirty miles in length by a breadth of only four; it joins the parish of Dingwall, from which it is distant 4 miles W. Acreage, 64,230. Population in 1881, 2,047.

KILLEARNAN is a small parish, eight miles in length by a breadth of five, and is situated five miles from Dingwall. Acreage, 7,269. Population in 1881, 1,059.

The parish of URQUHART is two miles E. distant from Dingwall. It is ten miles long with a breadth of five, has an area of 13,581 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,525.

URRAY is a parish five miles S. from Dingwall. It is 15 miles in length, with a breadth of nine. Acreage, 72,640. Population in 1881, 2,474.

FORTROSE IN ROSEMARKIE, AND AVOCH.

FORTROSE is a small market town and representative burgh in the parish of Rosemarkie, 10 miles N. from Inverness, 21 miles S. from Tain, and 18 N.N.E. from Beauly, situated on the north side of the inner part of the Moray Firth, nearly opposite to Fort George, from which it is distant two miles and a half. Before the abolition of Episcopal establishments in Scotland, Fortrose cathedral was the seat of the bishopric of Ross, and this town was likewise the chief seat of learning in this quarter of that kingdom; it was mentioned in history by the title of the "Chanonry of Ross." James II. in 1444 united the town in burghal privileges with the neighbouring village of Rosemarkie, under the name of Fort-Ross, which has since been softened down into Fortrose. But small portions of the ancient cathedral now remain entire; one part of it is used as a courthouse, and another division is a burial place.

ROSEMARKIE is comparatively a smaller place than Fortrose, though in point of antiquity it takes the precedence as being a parish town. Between the former place and Fort George there is a regular ferry, and the town has an excellent harbour, erected by the parliamentary commissioners. There has since been erected a jetty, about 250 yards in length, at a cost of £3,000. Fortrose enjoys every advantage for sea-bathing; and there is an excellent hotel—the Royal—which affords very good accommodation, and is also a posting establishment. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and nine councillors; and it joins with Inverness, Forres and Nairn, in sending one member to Parliament. The present representative is Robert B. Finlay, Esq.

The parish church, which is at Rosemarkie, was completed in 1821; it is in the late Gothic style, and considered to be a very handsome, well-finished building. Its situation has been happily selected, and its commanding aspect on the coast uniformly attracts the particular notice of strangers. More recently a neat church has been erected at Fortrose for the Free Communion of Scotland, and there is an Episcopal church. The parish of Rosemarkie extends six miles in length by three in breadth. Its situation is fine and pleasant; the hills both on the north and south are for the most part arable, being in summer covered with verdure, and producing early and abundant crops. The coast all along between Rosemarkie and Cromarty is bold and rocky; it abounds with romantic views and frightful precipices. As the country lies dry and has the benefit of fine sea breezes, the air is pure and salubrious. Fairs are held on the Monday before Beauly Fair. The entire parish of Rosemarkie, which embraces an area of 6,675 acres, contained in 1881 a population of 1,357; of this number 874 were returned as belonging to Fortrose, and 383 to the village of Rosemarkie.

AVOCH is a parish 2 miles S.S.E. from Fortrose, and 7 N from Inverness. Acreage, 8,030. Population in 1881, 1,691.

GAIRLOCH,

WITH THE PARISH OF APPLECROSS, AND THE VILLAGES OF POOLEWE, AULTBAE, KINLOCHEWE AND SHIELDAIG

GAIRLOCH parish is about 40 miles in length by 38 in breadth, and abounds in mountains, lochs, heaths, &c. For beauty of scenery and abundance of game of all descriptions it is, perhaps, unsurpassed by any other district in the north. An Established and two Free churches, together with several schools, are in the parish. There is also a branch of the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, at Gairloch. Acreage, 200,646. Population in 1881, 4,594.

POOLEWE is a small village in the parish of Gairloch, 64 miles W. from Dingwall, and about the same distance S.E. from Stornoway, situated at the head of a fine bay called Loch Ewe. According to an inventory from the title deeds still in the possession of the Gairloch family, the old name for the village of Poolewe was Clire. It was erected into a burgh of barony in 1619, and a charter of registration in favour of the then proprietor was granted under the great seal, erecting Clive, on the water of Ewe, into a burgh of barony, and the harbour of Ewe into a free port, with power from year to year of electing a provost, bailies, &c.; and not only of keeping burgh courts for the good government of the burgh, and the administration of justice to the inhabitants, and all others concerned, but of creating burgesses, levying the burgh duties, buying and selling merchandise as practised in other burghs in the kingdom, and planting artizans, keeping weights and measures, and levying customs, anchorage, &c. after the manner of other royalties; of having a market cross, a Saturday market each week, and a public market once a year, under the name of Michaelmas market, beginning September 29th, and continuing four days. It does not appear that any use was ever made of this charter, as far as Clive was concerned. It is very probable that the proprietor of Gairloch may have desired to introduce trade and commerce into the country, and had planted "artizans" at Poolewe, and obtained this charter to encourage the settling of others. However this may be, Poolewe at the present day has no evidence of the success of such an attempt. The proprietor, John of Gairloch, may have attempted such favourite schemes, but it appears that his successor, Alexander, did not carry them out. John died eleven years after the granting of the charter, and Alexander eight years later, leaving a son, Kenneth, a minor. Poolewe is part of the estate of Gairloch, and is a quoad sacra parish; a quoad sacra church and a Free church are the places of worship. In Poolewe and the neighbouring districts are several schools for the education of the young. The school at BUALNALUIP is one of the finest selections for educational purposes in any rural parish in the north of Scotland; it was erected and endowed by Francis Harford Mackenzie, Esq., and is now a Board school. The only station on the west coast for curing salmon, grilse and trout, is that at Poolewe, which is carried on to a great extent by Messrs. Hogarth & Co., of Aberdeen. Poolewe is about two miles from Loch Maree, which abounds with fish. This lake contains twenty-four islands; some of these are but little raised above water, and are covered with scattered firs, and with thickets of Birch, alder and holly; while they are separated by narrow sinuous channels. The northern margin of the loch presents a variety of close shore scenery consisting of rocky and wooded bays and creeks, crowned by noble overhanging cliffs and mountains; in one place the remains of a fir forest, in a situation almost incredible, produces a style of landscape that might be exposed among the Alps, but not within the more confined scope and lower arrangements of Scottish mountains. This lake is eighteen miles in length, and from three to four in breadth; one of the islands is called Maree, from which the water takes its name, and tradition says that some noble personages from Norway were buried here. Loch Maree is the property of Sir Kenneth S. M'Kenzie, Bart., of Gairloch. Into the inner part of Loch Ewe (or Ew, or Eu) pours the river Ewe, which is scarcely two miles in length, and is the natural outlet from Loch Maree; the river has a rapid turbulent course, and is noted for the abundance of its salmon. Nearly two centuries ago an extensive iron furnace was in operation near Poolewe, but its fires became extinguished after consuming the greater part of the timber around it. Since the opening of the Dingwall and Skye Railway there is regular communication by coach from the hotel at ACHNASHEEN station to KINLOCHEWE, GAIRLOCH, POOLEWE and AULTBAE. Two large hotels are on this route, one at LOCH MAREE and another at GAIRLOCH, for the accommodation of tourists. The population of Poolewe is included in that of Gairloch.

APPLECROSS is a parish in the highlands of West Ross, on Applecross Bay. Its size is about 15 miles in length, and the same in breadth. The population is chiefly engaged in fishing, but the farmers derive their wealth principally from rearing black cattle and sheep. The greater part of the parish is occupied as a deer forest by Lord Middleton, Lord Lovelace, Duncan Darroch, Esq., and Charles James Murray, Esq. The scenery in some parts of this parish is the finest in Ross-shire. The climate is very moist, torrents of rain being frequent all the year round. There is a good limestone quarry on Applecross Bay. Acreage, 112,895. Population in 1881, 2,239.

INVERGORDON,

ROSSKEEN, ALNESS, EVANTON, KILMUIR EASTER, KILTEARN, AND LOGIE EASTER.

INVERGORDON is a thriving seaport town in the parish of Rosskeen, county of Ross, 12 miles S.S.W. from Tain, 13 N.N.E. from Dingwall, and 8 W. by N. from Cromarty, most eligibly seated on the north side of the fine bay of Cromarty, from whence there is a regular ferry to the opposite shore of the Firth. For the accommodation of persons crossing, a small pier was erected in 1821, partly at the expense of the county and partly with the assistance of Government, so that boats can now land their passengers at any time of the tide; but the most valuable and important improvement was conferred upon the port through the munificence and public spirit of the late proprietor, R. B. Æ. M'Leod, Esq., of Cadboll, who at his own expense constructed an excellent harbour in 1823. This for many years, owing to the central position of the place, served for the landing of the seaborne goods for the eastern and western parts of Rossshire, as well as for most parts of Sutherlandshire. In 1857 the accommodation was greatly increased by the erection of large wooden piers, extending several feet further into the channel, and which admitted of the steamers plying with Leith, London, &c., coming alongside. The extension, however, of railway communication to the town in 1863, and subsequently further north, has for the present diverted a large proportion of this traffic. The bay is perfectly commodious and safe, and capable of containing a large fleet, with anchorage of the best description, from which vessels never drive, the "Souters of Cromarty" forming a natural mouth to one great harbour. The town has undergone considerable improvements of late years, and its appearance enlivened by the erection in 1861 of a very handsome Free church, capable of accommodating nearly a thousand sitters. The body of it is cruciform in shape, and there is a spire some 140 feet high, much admired for its handsome proportions. There are also some other excellent buildings, amongst which may be mentioned a handsome house and offices belonging to the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a very neat building belonging to the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and several shops which for elegance are not surpassed in the north of Scotland. The Town Hall was opened in April, 1871. It is a conspicuous building in the middle of the High street, in the Italian style of architecture, its most important feature being a pediment, with a beautifully sculptured group representing the god Neptune, with the accessories of the "horn of plenty" on one side and aquatic plants on the other. The manufacture of hemp was once carried on in this town with very considerable spirit by two establishments. Nothing is now done in this branch of commerce. The principal public work is at present a bone crushing and manure manufacturing establishment, carried on in a set of buildings covering over an acre of ground, and employing some score of workpeople. There are several comfortable inns, the principal one, the Commercial, in High street, affording the best accommodation to tourists and travellers, is an excellent house. A justice of peace court is held when necessary, and a sheriff court quarterly. In 1864 the town was taken under the provisions of Provost Lindsay's Police Act. About one mile from the town is Invergordon Castle, where are some fine plantations. In November, 1801, the centre of the edifice was accidentally destroyed by fire, but in 1873-4 a very elegant structure was erected on the old site. It is in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and is much admired for its noble appearance. The parish of Rosskeen extends six miles along the Firth of Cromarty and ten inland. The parish of Alness lies on the west, and Logie on the east. The lower part of the parish, which runs along the Firth, and for about two miles back, forms a gentle and easy access to the hills. A hill called Knock-Navie, or Coldhill, divides the lower from the highland part of the parish. Beyond the upper arable ground and inhabited glens is a very considerable range of mountains, applicable to no other purpose than that of pasturing black cattle or sheep. Like the adjacent parts of the shire, the parish has been greatly improved in agricultural capabilities, and now possesses some fine plantations, the chief of these belonging to Invergordon Castle, before mentioned. The town was supplied with gas in 1872. Fairs are held the third Tuesday in April, the first Tuesday in August, the second Tuesday in October, and the third Tuesday in December. In 1881 the parish of Rosskeen, which covers an area of 33,725 acres, had a population of 3,773; of this number 1,119 were returned for Invergordon.

KILMUIR EASTER is a parish five miles S. from Tain, and on the west side of Cromarty Firth. Its size is about ten miles in length by four in breadth. An Established and a Free church are the places of worship. Acreage, 10,999. Population in 1881, 1,146.

KILTEARN is a parish six miles N.E. of Dingwall, situated on Cromarty Firth. It is a large parish, being twenty miles in length, by a breadth of about six miles. An Established and a Free church are in the parish, which has an area of 27,972 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,182.

ALNESS is a small village, partly in the parish of its name and partly in that of Rosskeen, 3 miles S.W. from Invergordon, situated on both sides of the Alness (which river separates the two parishes), and on the north side of Cromarty bay. The church is about half a mile from the village. The distillation of whisky is carried on extensively in this district by two large establishments. The following fairs are held in Alness:—On the second Tuesday in June, Wednesday before the third Thursday in July, and Wednesday after the third Tuesday in September. The parish of Alness embraces an area of 44,041 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,033.

EVANTON is a rural village, about 7 miles S.W. from Invergordon, and 4 in the like direction from Alness, situate, like the two latter places, on the north side of Cromarty Bay, and sheltered by a row of trees which defend it from the sea breeze. The church is about a mile distant. About two miles to the westward is FOWLIS-FERRY, used for loading grain, timber and cattle, and a mile north-east of the village is a deep ravine called "Aultgraade," supposed to have been formed at some very early period by a mighty convulsion of nature. Fairs are held in this village on the first Tuesday in June and December. Population in 1881, 436.

LOGIE EASTER is a small parish, seven miles in length and two in breadth, situated in a fine hollow on the Balnagown river. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. Acreage 9,978. Population in 1881, 827.

STORNOWAY (ISLAND OF LEWIS),

BARVAS, LOCHS, AND UIG.

STORNOWAY is a parish in the ISLAND OF LEWIS, county of Ross. The town, which has greatly increased in importance of late years, is 65 miles N. from Portree (in Skye), and 60 from Poolewe, described in a preceding page. It is situated in north latitude 58 deg. 7 min., and in west longitude 6 deg. 14 min. 10 sec., at the head of a fine bay, called Loch Stornoway, considered one of the safest and most commodious harbours in the north, or even Great Britain. The entrance to it is north and north by west, and it is easy of access to vessels of any burthen at any time of the tide. A lighthouse stands on Arinish point, on the south side of the harbour, erected by the Commissioners of Northern Lights. Another lighthouse has been built on the Butt of Lewis by the Commissioners. The town is built round the bay, in form of an amphitheatre, and the streets run in direct lines. The houses are neat and well built, and being in general whitewashed, have a clean appearance. A most convenient quay, with slips and landing places, has been constructed. A substantial wall has since been erected round the basin of the harbour. The stranger on entering the bay is forcibly struck with the imposing and magnificent appearance of Lewis Castle, in the Tudor and castellated style of architecture. It occupies a commanding position west of the town, and was erected by its late proprietor, Sir James Matheson, at an outlay of £60,000. It is surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds. There is also a glass conservatory, with a colonnade communicating with the castle, erected by Mr. Cranstone, of Birmingham, who has patented the plan. The town, too, as seen on entering the bay, presents a pleasing aspect. From small origin, Stornoway has gradually risen to considerable importance, through the spirit and enterprise of its inhabitants. The Island of Lewis, or Lews, next to Ireland, is the largest of the British Isles, being 45 miles in length, 15 in average breadth, and 30 in extreme breadth. It was acquired by the late Sir Jas. Matheson, Bart., of Achany, in 1844, from the representatives of the late Earl of Seaforth, for the sum of £190,000. Among the improvements accomplished may be mentioned the draining of thousands of acres of moor or waste land, planting several hundred acres with timber trees, whilst immediately surrounding the castle, pleasure grounds and walks have been tastefully laid out, and drives formed. In Stornoway a patent slip was constructed at a cost of £7,000, which will draw up vessels of 800 tons burthen into dock for the purpose of making repairs—a great advantage to the shipowners of Stornoway and others visiting the port. The white fishery, consisting of cod and ling, has been long and successfully prosecuted in these waters, besides which the salmon fishery is very productive. The months of May, June, and July are the season for herring fishing, when from eight to nine hundred boats, with a complement of five hands to each boat, are employed throughout the island; and during this period four hundred tons of fish or more have been exported, consisting chiefly of cod, ling, and herring. The ling and cod are caught during the winter and spring months, and are dried and forwarded to the Glasgow and Liverpool markets, and as many as 60,000 and 70,000 barrels of herrings have been forwarded in one year, chiefly to the Hamburg, Stettin, and St. Petersburg markets. The herring fishing of late years has been prosecuted with considerable success, the number of boats has increased, and the boats used have been improved. Many steamers are employed in carrying the fish to the nearest railway stations at Strome Ferry and Oban, and also to Fleetwood. At Stornoway a large quantity is prepared in a kippered state, and exported principally to the English markets, there being no less than fourteen kippering establishments in full operation. The gas works, erected in 1848, are still in operation, and manufacture on an average about 1,000,000 cubic feet of gas annually. The streets of the burgh are well lighted with gas, and great improvements in the paving of them have been completed. The monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, British Linen Co. Bank, and Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, which have been established in this distant quarter for many years. There are likewise agents for Lloyd's, and for several insurance companies, and three excellent hotels, the Lewis, the Royal, and the Imperial may be considered as exceedingly eligible establishments for families and commercial gentlemen. Stornoway was erected into a burgh of barony by James VI. with the design of promoting the civilization of the Western Isles; it has adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. A sheriff court sits every Tuesday during the session for ordinary and small debt business, and justice of peace, commissary and criminal courts are held as occasion may require. Stornoway possesses several educational, religious, and social institutions. The Nicholson Institution, situated off James street, was endowed by the late Sir James Matheson with a salary of £35 annually for the teacher. The same gentleman also contributed the site for the building and playgrounds free of charge. The Free Church school is conducted upon the plan of the Normal Seminary; there is also a school for females, instituted and endowed by the proprietor and his lady, affording a thorough English education to the numerous pupils, and instruction in every kind of needlework. There are a number of societies for mutual improvement, including the Young Men's, and the Free Church Young Men's Christian Associations. There are also a public library and reading room; to the latter strangers are admitted free upon the recommendation of a member. The Horticultural Society has been re-organised, and holds public competitions in flowers and vegetables in July and October. The edifice erected for the service of a masonic lodge is a handsome structure; in it are occasionally held assemblies, concerts and public meetings; in the same building is a public library. The parish of Stornoway lies on the north-east of Lewis Island, bounded on the inland side by Barvas. It extends nineteen miles in length, by from four to seven in breadth. The surface is generally flat and moorish, the shores partly sand and partly rock, and indented by a number of bays. Steamers, handsomely fitted up for passengers, ply daily between Glasgow and Stornoway, besides those which call at Stornoway weekly.

The most remarkable ancient remains in the Island of Lewis are the Druidical standing stones or Temple of Callanish; they are forty-three in number, arranged in a cruciform manner, with a circle at the intersection from which the wings radiate, and extend north and south 600 feet with the line corresponding with the long leg of the cross. The late proprietor enclosed the circle with a neat wire fence, and the ground about it is cleared. On a lower eminence, half a mile from the Callanish temple, there is another cluster of standing stones. Throughout the island there are various specimens, single and in fours, of these standing obelisks, probably erected as memorials, and there is a cave at Gress, 200 feet in length, which is comparatively unknown to the inhabitants.

At MEALISTA UIG, not far from the shrine of St. Catan, are the remains of a nunnery which has found no name in history, but is still designated by a Gaelic name commemorative of the abode of the sable sisterhood. At a little distance from this locality there were discovered some years ago upwards of sixty ebony figures, beautifully executed, and from their costume evidently of very ancient manufacture; they were about four inches long, partly stained of a beetroot colour, and from their variety in form and shape were probably designed chessmen. The population of the whole of the Island of Lewis was in 1881, 25,415; of this number 10,323 belonged to the parish of Stornoway.

WITH LOCHCARRON (WITH VILLAGE OF JEANTOWN), KINTAIL (WITH VILLAGE OF DORNIE), LOCHALSH (WITH VILLAGE OF PLOCKTON), AND GLENSHIEL.

STROME FERRY, in the parish of Lochalsh, has recently sprung into prominence through being the terminus of the Dingwall and Skye Railway, and the most direct route to Portree, to which place steamers ply regularly, and from thence there is communication by MacBrayne's steamers with Stornoway, Glasgow, &c. There is a first-class hotel here, at which tourists and others will find suitable accommodation.

KINTAIL parish is bounded on the north and west by Lochalsh, on the south by Glenshiel, and on the east by Kilmorack. It is altogether a very mountainous district. In the village of DORNIE, in this parish, has been erected through the munificence of the late Duchess of Leeds, a beautiful Roman Catholic chapel, with schools attached. Acreage, 77,441. Population in 1881, 688.

TAIN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF EDDERTON, FEARN, KINCARDINE, NIGG AND TARBAT, AND THE VILLAGES OF ARDGAY AND PORTMAHOMACK.

TAIN is a parish, a royal burgh, and a market town, 46 miles N. from Inverness, and 26 N. by E. from Dingwall, occupying a gentle acclivity about a mile from the Firth of Dornoch, across which arm of the sea several ferries are established, and near its head an iron bridge crosses it. The ancient Gaelic name of the town is Baldui, signifying "the town of St. Duthac" (or Duthus), to whom the old church and chapel in the parish had been dedicated. The old chapel of St. Duthus, standing below the town near the railway station, was built about 1200; to it Robert the Bruce's queen and her retinue fled for refuge, but were taken captive by the Earl of Ross and delivered up to the English. The church, which was founded by Thomas, Bishop of Ross, in 1428, is an elegant structure, and was used as a parish church until 1815, but was afterwards left unprotected and ruinous for upwards of 40 years, when its restoration by public subscription was undertaken and conducted until 1877 by Mr. John M'Leod, then provost of Tain, and thereafter by his son, George M'Leod, until 1882. It contains some beautiful stained glass windows to the memory of families in the district, and monuments to Thomas Hog and Patrick Hamilton, the Scottish martyrs. St. Duthac seems to have been a saint who enjoyed a considerable reputation in Scotland in the 15th century, as records state that James IV. once made a pilgrimage on foot from Falkland, in Fife, to his shrine at the church of Tain, for the expiation of some offence. He travelled with unusual expedition, resting only a short time by the way at the monastery of Pluscardine, and on his arrival bestowed upon the town of Tain extensive grants of land, with other immunities. The inhabitants, hearing of his approach, constructed a hasty roadway over a peat moss, within a few miles of the town, which is still called "the King's Causeway." A rich agricultural district surrounds the town, which is old and irregularly built, but of late years it has received improvements and additions by the erection of many good houses and buildings for public use. Among the latter is a new Court House, surmounted by pinnacles, and presenting a handsome appearance, a large hall for assemblies and public meetings, and a very handsome hotel (the Royal), the churches, and the Royal Academy. The last-named, which is agreeably situated in an open park at the west end of the town, and is a superior educational institution, was founded by Royal charter in 1809, and opened in 1812, the cost of its erection having been raised by subscription. The courses of education are conducted by a rector with a classical master and assistants. The Court House, previous to 1833, was used as a place of confinement for debtors; in April of that year it was destroyed by fire, when three persons perished in the flames; the present Court House is erected on its site. The trade of Tain is of the usual character found in country towns. The most prominent branches are distilling and woollen manufacturing. There are four banking houses and a savings bank establishment here, branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and North of Scotland Bank, Limited. As a royal burgh, it is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and nine councillors; and unites with Cromarty and other contributory burghs (named under that town) in returning one member to Parliament. A sheriff small debt court is held in Tain every Wednesday during session, and a justice of peace court every Thursday fortnight. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church—a handsome building erected in 1844—a United Presbyterian church, and an Episcopal church. The first mentioned edifice is of considerable dimensions—in form quadrangular, with a castellated tower at each corner, which, not rising above the main body of the building, renders the general appearance of the whole more massive than elegant. The parish of Tain extends 8 miles along the south shore of the Dornoch Firth, by a breadth of 4 miles inland. The ground in general is flat, but towards the west rather hilly. The district is tolerably well wooded, much improved by agricultural operations, and, upon the whole, of a pleasing appearance. The sea shore is flat and sandy. The Highland railway passes through Tain, and has a station here. The principal markets are held on the Wednesday after the second Tuesday in July, on the Wednesday after the third Tuesday in August, and on the third Tuesday in October; and corn markets are held every other Friday. In 1831 the parish of Tain, which covers an area of 16,673 acres, had a population of 3,009; of this number the town possessed 1,742.

PORTMAHOMACK is a small seaport and fishing village in the parish of TARBAT, 10 miles E. from Tain; situated on the north coast. The parish is 7½ miles long and 4½ wide. Its form is generally peninsular, and gradually diminishes in width until it terminates in a point at Tarbat Ness, which divides the Dornoch and Moray Firths, and on which there is an elegant lighthouse, with a revolving light. The parish of Tarbat embraces an area of 6,787 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,878, of which 301 belonged to Portmahomack.

FEARN is a parish, bounded on the north by Tain, on the West by Logie, and the South by Nigg. The village of Fearn is 5 miles S.W. from Tain. Length and breadth of the parish, each about 2 miles. Loch Eye, a fine sheet of water, nearly two miles in length, is in this parish. There are an Established and a Free church and several public schools in the parish. The Highland Railway Company has a station here. Acreage 7,841. Population in 1881, 2,135.

EDDERTON is a parish, bounded on the north by Kincardine, on the south by Tain, on the east by the Firth of Dornoch, and on the west by Kilmuir. It is 9 miles long and 4 miles broad. The distillation of whiskey is carried on extensively in this parish by a large establishment. Acreage, 22,120. In 1881 Edderton had a population of 789.

NIGG is a parish north of Cromarty, and separated from it by the opening of the Cromarty Firth, having a length of 6 miles with a breadth of from 2 to 3. A third of the parish consists of its most interesting physical feature, the Hill of Nigg, rising to a height of 500 feet. From the highest point nine counties may be seen by the naked eye. Nigg includes the fishing villages of SHANDWICK and BALNABRUACH. The parish of Nigg has an area of 7,818 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,000.

ARDGAY is a village in the parish of KINCARDINE, and one mile from Bonar Bridge, situated on the north border of Ross-shire. It has a commodious inn, called the Balnagown Arms, where every comfort will be found. A deed was granted in the year 1636 to erect the village into a burgh of barony, but the deed was never carried into effect. Kincardine parish has an area of 153,054 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,472.

ULLAPOOL,

LOCHBROOM AND COIGACH.

ULLAPOOL is a seaport and fishing village in the parish of LOCHBROOM, 61 miles W. by N. from Inverness, 50 N.W.N. by W. from Dingwall, and 30 N.E. from Poolewe, situated on the west coast of Ross-shire, on the north side of an extensive inlet of the sea, called Loch Broom, and is overhung by a long rugged precipitous face of rock. It was begun to be built under the auspices of the British Fishery Society in 1788, and has been gradually increasing since that period. It possesses a spacious and excellent harbour, and there is a good quay for the use of vessels. Steamers sail regularly to Stornoway, in Lewis, and to Glasgow. In Ullapool a very handsome hotel has been erected, and there is also a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The nearest railway station at present is Garve, on the Dingwall and Skye railway. The chief trade of the place is the herring fishery, which is the main dependence of its inhabitants. Prodigious shoals of this fish appear on the coast of Loch Broom as early as May, but they pass on towards the south, and do not strike into the lochs and arms of the sea as to be of benefit to the inhabitants until the month of September, when their appearance is anxiously looked for, great preparations made, and considerable expense incurred by the poor people to profit by their expected bounty. When the shoals set fairly in, and remain in the lochs and bays, the number taken is very great, and of the very best quality. Ullapool, in the season, is attended from all parts of the east and west coast, and even from Ireland, by curers, and during this period the place presents a very animated appearance. The want of good roads in this district has been an inconvenience long felt by the inhabitants of the circumjacent country. The late Hugh Mackenzie, Esq. of Ardross and Dundonnell, opened up new roads in various directions. Ullapool is the property of the heirs of the late Sir James Matheson, Bart. who conferred great benefits on Stornoway and other parts of Lewis, by his spirited and costly improvements in roads, &c. Ullapool is crowded in summer by sportsmen from all parts to enjoy the fishing and shooting. There is a small grouse shooting box attached to the hotel, which has added to the many attractions already in the village. The parish church is situated at the head of Loch Broom, and was built in 1844. There is a quoad sacra church with a district attached. A Free church is also situated in the village. A justice of peace court for the recovery of small debts is held occasionally in the village. In 1881 the parish of Lochbroom, which has an area of 261,021 acres, possessed a population of 4,191; of this number 897 belonged to Ullapool.

ROXBURGHSHIRE.

THIS county, which lies on the south-eastern border of Scotland, is bounded by Northumberland on the east, Dumfries-shire on the south-west, by the county of Selkirk on the west, by Berwickshire on the north, and by Northumberland and part of Cumberland on the south. The figure of the county is extremely irregular; it measures from its extreme point on the south to that part which is inserted between the counties of Berwick and Edinburgh upwards of forty miles; and from east to west, near the centre, about thirty miles. The area of the shire contains 665 square miles, or 425,657 acres, about one half of which is brought into cultivation. The county is divided by its waters into several districts, of which the chief and largest is Teviotdale, being that division drained by the Teviot and its tributary streams; this district comprehends about 500 square miles. Liddesdale, which forms the south-west corner of the county, comprehends the Alpine territory, which is drained by the Liddle and its tributaries, and contains 120 square miles. The third division lies between the Gala and Leader streams, measuring 26 square miles; and the fourth, which is situate north of the Tweed, is included in the "the Merse," and comprehends 27 square miles. In size, Roxburgh is the fourteenth, and in population the seventeenth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY, &c.—At the time of the Christian epoch, the western and greater part of Roxburghshire was inhabited by the Gadenii, while the eastern and lesser districts were occupied by the Ottadinii, who had numerous strongholds in the shire, ruins and traces of which are still visible. The district is also intersected by Roman roads in various directions, and the whole shire presents a field of the greatest interest to the antiquarian and the historian. There is another class of antiquities belonging to the county worthy of notice and inspection—these are towers or castles; among them are the castle of Jedburgh, that of Roxburgh, Hermitage Castle (in Liddesdale), and other similar structures of minor celebrity. The district was likewise famed for its religious edifices, which included the abbeys of Jedburgh, Melrose, and Kelso. From its situation on the confines of the two kingdoms, Roxburghshire suffered severely throughout the various border wars; and few were so distinguished in the conflicts of the middle ages as the "men of Teviotdale," many of whom followed David, in 1128, to "the Battle of the Standard," in which they fought by his side, and shared his misfortune. During these fierce agressions, the marches of the kingdom were at different periods contracted and extended (this district being occasionally wholly or partly under English domination), till the year 1857, when the borders were finally settled as they then happened to lie; and by this arrangement Roxburghshire was for ever attached to Scotland.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The southern parts of Roxburghshire are very mountainous, and throughout the whole territory there is little land absolutely flat; in many instances, however, the hilly grounds rise in beautiful swells from the rich valleys at their base; the aspect of the country is thus finely diversified in respect to surface and elevation, while the beauty of the district is greatly enhanced by the clear rivers and brooks which flow through the different vales. The following are the principal mountains and eminences, with their respective altitudes above the level of the sea:—Cheviot, 2,682 feet; Auchopecairn, 2,382; Chill Hil, Millenwood Fells and Windhead Fells, each 2,000; Tudhope Fell, 1,830; Carter Fell, 1,602; Meggs Hill, 1,480; Ruberslaw, 1,392; Eildon Hills, 1,330; Dunnian, 1,021; Minto Hills, 858; and Minto Craigs, 649. The soil of the county is various, and much of it exceedingly fertile; in some parts a rich loam prevails, in others, gravel and clay, in various proportions; the heavy clayey soil occupying the higher grounds, while the valued loam is generally found on low and level tracts, near the beds of rivers and rivulets. In Liddesdale there is much mossy land; but for a county so mountainous, the proportion of heath and moss is inconsiderable. It has been ascertained that so early as the twelfth century the district produced great quantities of corn, and the amount of barley then ground at the mills exhibited the progress in the manufacture of grain. Under the intelligent monks the agriculture of the county arrived at considerable perfection; and it is a matter of certainty that they introduced the knowledge of horticulture. Apples and pears are now extensivey cultivated in the orchards of Melrose, Jedburgh and Kelso. In later times Roxburghshire has kept pace with the other counties in those extraordinary improvements in the management of the soil, and excellent crops of wheat, barley, and oats are now grown, as are also potatoes, peas, beans, and turnips, the latter considered to be the most remunerative to the farmer, as they serve the purpose of food for the great numbers of sheep and cattle that are reared, and for the disposal of which large stock sales are held at Hawick, Kelso and Newtown St. Boswells, which are attended by buyers from all parts of the United Kingdom. The mineralogy of the shire is neither valuable nor varied. Between the years 1700 and 1770 coal was discovered in the hill called Carter Fell, in this county, near the borders of Northumberland; but though wrought for some time it was ultimately abandoned as unprofitable; another seam was subsequently found near the south-eastern portion of Liddesdale, from which little benefit has been derived beyond that detached district. Various attempts have been made to find coal in different places in the county, but not one of them was conducted on a scale adequate to the importance of the object, and the inhabitants are still supplied with this valuable fossil from Dumfries-shire, Lothian, or Northumberland. The manufactures of Roxburghshire do not vary much. If a staple of the county may be particularised, it is that of articles made from wool, the seats of which are at Hawick, Jedburgh, and Kelso, where flannels, blankets, tartans, woollen cloth, lambs' wool yarn, and hosiery are extensively manufactured. The salmon fisheries of the Tweed are of consequence, and yield handsome rents to the proprietors. The county contains many elegant mansions and beautiful seats, one of the most interesting of these is Abbotsford, the seat of the late eminent novelist, Sir Walter Scott; it is a fine Gothic castle, the internal and external decorations of which characterise it as having been the residence of the poet, the antiquary and the man of superior and refined taste. But not to the mansion was the cultivated taste and judgment of the poet confined. H covered his extensive property with the most skilfully disposed and thriving plantations, and by his improvements induced others to contribute to ornament that beautiful portion of the valley of the Tweed.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal streams of Roxburghshire are beautiful and interesting, and their tributaries numerous. The noble Tweed enters the county near the influx of the Ettrick, winds through the fertile vales of Melrose and Kelso, and in a course of thirty miles receives the Gala, the Allan, the Leader, the Teviot and the Eden. The Teviot, which falls into the Tweed nearly opposite to Kelso, is a lovely river; it passes through a vale to which it gives name, and in a course of from thirty to forty miles receives the Borthwick, the Ale, the Slitterick, the Rule, the Jed, the Oxnam, and the Kealie waters, with many subsidiary streamlets. The Liddle rises in and runs through the parish of Castletown; it gives the names of Liddesdale to a division of the county, and for a distance of four or five miles forms the boundary with England. The streams tributary to the Liddle are the Hermitage, the Tweeden, the Tennis, the Kershope, and the Blackburn. The Tyne and Coquet rivers have their origin in this county, after which they enter England, and fall into the sea at Tynemouth and Coquet Isle. The lochs are small and few in number, the principal being Yetholm Loch, about a mile and a half in circumference. The waters of Roxburghshire, while useful and ornamental to the country through which they glide, possesses considerable interest to both the antiquary and the poet, from the associations connected with their streams; for besides being frequently mentioned in the pages of history, they have elicited laudatory strains from the Scottish lyrists, among the rest those of the author of "The Seasons." The principal railway line in connection with this county is the North British, with its several branches.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c. The county of Roxburgh comprises thirty entire parishes, and five parts of parishes; it contains only one royal burgh Jedburgh—which in connection with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, and Lauder, returns one member to Parliament, and the county sends another. The present member for the county is the Hon. Arthur Ralph Douglas Elliot. The parliamentary constituency for 1888-9 numbers (including Jedburgh), 6,124. The Lord Lieutenant is the Duke of Roxburghe. In 1871 the population was returned as 53,974—25,738 males, and 28,236 females; in 1881 the number was 53,442, viz. 25,486 males, and 28,006 females; a decrease in the ten years of 532. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £359,695, including railways.

ANCRUM AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

ANCRUM is a small village in the united parish of ANCRUM and LONGNEWTON, 11 miles W. from Kelso, 11 E. from Harwick, and 4 N. from Jedburgh; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the water of Ale, about a mile above its junction with the Teviot, and about three miles from the Harwick branch of the North British Railway. Ancrum House, the residence of Sir William M. Scott, Bart., stands in a delightful position, and commands some beautiful picturesque prospects; the trees in the park are considered the oldest and finest in this part of the country. At a short distance east of the village stood Ancrum Castle; opposite to which in the face of a perpendicular rock, are some caves, supposed to have been places of retreat in the troubles of former ages. In the early part of the last century the banks of the Teviot and Ale, at this spot, were the favourite haunt of Thomson, author of "The Seasons;" one of the caves just mentioned is still pointed out, in which, it is said, he frequently retired to indulge in his reveries, and on that account is called "Thomson's Cave;" his name is carved on the roof by, it is supposed, his own hand. Dr. Buchan, the celebrated author of "Domestic Medicine," and other medical works, was born in this village. The parish stretches six miles along the north side of the river Teviot, and its breadth is about four miles. A part of the Roman road that led from York to the banks of the Forth passes through the north corner of the parish, and the remains of a Roman encampment are discernible. The population of the parish in 1881 was 1,360; acreage, 10,295. Ancrum village numbers 430 inhabitants.

DENHOLM,

WITH THE PARISH OF CAVERS.

DENHOLM is a small village in the parish of CAVERS, five miles from Jedburgh, and the same distance from Hawick, pleasantly situated on a small plateau, shelving abruptly to the right bank of the Teviot, which is here crossed by a neat stone bridge, erected in 1864. Leading up towards the hills from a "holm," or a meadow is a richly wooded "dean," or ravine, which presents a series of romantic views, and from which Denholm takes its name. The village was much improved some years since, at a considerable expense, by James Douglas, Esq., of Cavers. The greater proportion of the inhabitants are engaged in rural pursuits. This parish contains an Established church, a Free church, a chapel for Independents, and two public schools. There is a subscription library in the village, and a horticultural society was formed in 1849. The celebrated Dr Leyden was born here, and a monument has been erected to his memory in the centre of the village green. The upper part of the district is hilly and pastoral, while the lower, which is in a fine state of cultivation, declines into rich arable fields. In 1881 the population of Denholm was 592.

CAVERS is a parish of very irregular figure, and of considerable extent, and consists of two detached portions on the southern side of the Teviot. The upper portion is separated from the lower one by Hawick and Kirktown parishes. Cavers contains 18,254 acres, and in 1881 the population numbered 1,318.

HAWICK,

HOBKIRK, KIRKTON, MINTO, ROBERTON, TEVIOT HEAD AND WILTON.

HAWICK is a thriving manufacturing town, a free burgh of regality, and capital of its parish, 50 miles S. by E. from Edinburgh, 20 S.W. from Kelso, 11 S. from Selkirk, and 45 N. from Carlisle, situated on the high road between the last named city and Edinburgh, on the Waverley route of the North British railway, for which there is a station not far from the centre of the town. It gives name to a parliamentary group of towns—the Hawick burghs—of which it is the most important, represented at present by Alexander Laing Brown, Esq. It is seated at the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot rivers. By the former stream the town is divided into nearly two equal parts, which are connected by three stone bridges. The village of WILTON, on the north bank of the Teviot, is now included in the burgh boundaries, the river being spanned by two stone bridges, one erected in 1865, and several foot-bridges. From its approximate position to the border of the two kingdoms, Hawick generally suffered severely from the incursions of the English, and was more than once burnt. One of its most destructive conflagrations occured in 1570, when it was set fire to by the English under Lord Sussex. The present town consists chiefly of one long line of streets, from which other thoroughfares diverge on the right bank of the Teviot; and on the left, or Wilton, bank of the river, of another continuous line of streets and minor thoroughfares extending from it. The town is generally well paved and lighted; the water supply, for many years defective, was in 1865 considerably increased by the introduction of the stream of the Allan, a mountain burn which joins the Teviot five miles above the town, and this has been supplemented by a new supply from Dodburn in the same locality. The water is excellent in quality, and in quantity is amply sufficient for the requirements of the population. These water schemes cost about £50,000. A thorough system of drainage has, since the introduction of the water, been carried out. The public buildings are the Town Hall, Temperance Hall, Cottage Hospital, and the Exchange; the latter is a large and handsome building, erected in 1865. The Town Hall and Municipal Buildings were re-built in 1885, at a cost of £15,000; this includes Free Library and Reading Room, the Free Libraries Act having been adopted here. The Buccleuch Memorial, erected by public subscription to commemorate the friendly relationship which has always existed between the town and the house of Buccleuch, consists of a Science and Art Institute and Museum.

The environs of Hawick are much admired by strangers; but the improvement of the neighbourhood has been retarded by the territory being held under strict entail, which prevents gentlemen of fortune from settling in this part of the country and embellishing its natural loveliness. The banks of the Teviot are extremely picturesque and delightful, and the approach to the town from the south can be scarcely surpassed for beauty. The great increase of manufacturing establishments, together with the erection of extensive mills, and the enlargement of others, have conduced to the increase of the population, and the consequent augmentation of buildings. Some of the residences of the manufacturers are on a scale which quite outstrip the mansions of the country gentry. Hawick is a burgh of barony, independent of the lord of erection, and appears to have existed free from a very early period; but the documents of the burgh having been either lost or destroyed during the inroads of the English borderers, a charter was granted in the year 1545, by James Douglas, Comte de Drumlanrig, confirming to the burgesses such rights and lands as they formerly possessed; and in the month of May of the same year this was confirmed by another charter, granted by Queen Mary. Under these grants the burgesses annually elected their magistrates, consisting of two bailies, and two representatives of each of seven incorporated trades, who, with fifteen councillors (elected for life), managed all municipal affairs of the town. In 1861, the inhabitants, with the concurrence of the existing town council, made application to Parliament for a reform of the municipal constitution, and the result was an Act which considerably extended the burgh boundaries, and provided that the councillors should be elected as in royal burghs, and have the whole management of the town property. The town is divided into five wards, each of which returns three councillors, who retire by rotation. The council elect a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and town clerk, and besides acting as custodiers of the burgh property exercise all the functions of commissioners of police. The provost and bailies are justices of the peace during their tenure of office. An efficient police force is established, and a court for petty offences is held daily; the justice of peace court being held on the third Thursday of the month. Hawick is noted for its great annual festival known as "The Common Riding," which has been regularly celebrated without intermission for at least three centuries. It originated, according to tradition, from the circumstances of some young men of the town having, in the year after the battle of Flodden (1514), surprised a party of marauding English during the night, about two miles below the town, and, after slaying the greater part of them, took possession of their colour; a fac-simile of this colour or ensign is now borne by an unmarried man of the burgh, elected for the occasion, and dubbed with the title of "Cornet," who accompanies the authorities in procession round the lands belonging to the town, of which a grant was made from the Laird of Drumlanrig as a reward for the valour displayed in obtaining the standard. This is one of the most considerable manufacturing and trading towns in the south of Scotland. There are two branches of the woollen manufacture—hosiery and Scotch tweeds, and for the production of both the town enjoys a fair reputation. Four banking agencies are settled here, namely the British Linen Company Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland.

The commerce and general trade of the place has received some improvement from the facility of communication from distant parts by railway transit. One of the principal hotels here, called The Tower, situate in the Market place, was a fortress, belonging to the superior of the burgh, and the only building not consumed by the forces of Sussex. At a more recent period it was the frequent residence of the celebrated Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth. There are places of worship of the Establishment, the Free church, and for various religious denominations—a list of these, with their officiating ministers, being given on a subsequent page. The establishment of several institutions evinces a taste for literary pursuits and useful knowledge; among these being a circulating library and public reading room, liberally furnished with London and provincial papers. There is also a flourishing Archæological Society, with which is connected a museum, rich in memorials of the ancient history of the border, and other antiquarian relics and curiosities. A combination poorhouse was erected in 1857, at a cost of £4,000; it will accommodate about 130 inmates. A farmers' club, or agricultural society, was formed here in 1776. Another club of the same kind, "The Teviotdale," was established in 1859. There is also the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, established in 1855, which has an annual exhibition of live stock. The market is held on Thursday, and there are auction sales of stock every Monday, and at the special sales during the summer as many 200,000 to 250,000 lambs occasionally pass under the hammer. The fairs are held on the 17th of May, the 21st of September, and the 8th of November; any of these days happening on Saturday, Sunday or Monday the fair is held on the following Tuesday. A tryst is likewise held in October, at which horses and cattle are exposed for sale; and there is a wool fair held on the first Thursday after St. Boswell's fair in July. Hawick parish comprises an area of 6,112 acres. The town of Hawick with Wilton contained in 1871 a population numbering 11,356, which in 1881 had increased to 16,184.

HOBKIRK, or HOPEKIRK, is a mountainous parish, 7 miles S.E. from Hawick, 11 miles long and about one and a half in breadth; it adjoins the parishes of Cavers, Bedrule, Southdean, Castleton and Kirkton. Acreage, 16,193. Population in 1881, 662.

KIRKTON is a parish, three miles S.E. from Hawick, about eight miles long and about one and a half broad, adjoining Cavers, Hobkirk and Hawick. Acreage, 6,202. Population in 1881, 334.

MINTO is a parish, five miles N.E. from Hawick, about five and a half miles long, and its greatest breadth about three miles; bounded by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers, Wilton, and the county of Selkirk. Acreage, 5,602. Population in 1881, 433.

ROBERTON is a parish, five miles W. from Hawick, partly in Roxburghshire, and partly in Selkirkshire, bounded by Yarrow, Selkirk, Ashkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Dumfries-shire and Ettrick. It is 13 miles long and about five broad, and is very mountainous. Acreage, 29,419. Population in 1881, 567.

WILTON is a parish adjoining Hawick; the greatest portion of its houses, factories, &c. form a portion of the town of Hawick, and nearly all its social and commercial interests are identified with that town. Acreage, 8,760. Population returned with Hawick.

JEDBURGH,

BEDRULE, CRAILING, HOWNAM, OXNAM, AND SOUTHDEAN.

JEDBURGH is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the capital of its parish, and the county town; 46 miles S.E. from Edinburgh (by Lauder), 10 s. by W. from Kelso, the same distance N. by E. from Hawick, and 12 N. from the English border; agreeably situate on the left bank of the Jed, the name of which river, with worth, the Saxon name for hamlet, formed its ancient appellation of Jedworth, or Jedworth; in the course of time it became perverted to its present designation, but through a very extensive district in the south the old name is partly retained, by pronouncing it Jeddart, or Jethart, which are almost exclusively used by the common people. The town, which stands on the declivity of a hill, and surrounded on every side by others of considerable height, is in general well built, and consists of four principal streets which cross each other at right angles, and form a square or market place in the centre. The streets and principal shops are lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water. The river Jed, which takes its rise in the Carter, one of the hills of the Cheviot range, and runs along the south-east side of the town, is crossed by no fewer than seven bridges within a mile. In recent times Jedburgh has been greatly improved, and many new buildings have been erected. The principal architectural and antiquarian object of attraction in the town is the abbey, which stands upon a piece of ground between the houses and the river. Although for the most part in a ruinous condition, it still exhibits an outline of its original magnitude and magnificence. To preserve the venerable edifice from the destruction towards which it was hastening, it several years since received considerable repairs, which were so judiciously conducted as not to interfere with or alter the original design of the structure, which is of Gothic and Norman order. It was founded for canons regular by David I. It runs from east to west, and appears to have been originally three storeys in height; the nave from the tower, and the south front, are mostly entire, but there is no roof on any part of it. The tower, which is still standing in tolerably good preservation, is about 90 feet in height. Among the other prominent public buildings of Jedburgh are the Gaol and Bridewell, the Town Hall and the Corn Exchange; the first named is designated the "Castle," from its occupying the site of the ancient fortress. It is a fine erection, in the castellated style, but is no longer used as a prison. From its elevated situation it is seen at a considerable distance, and from its summit a delightful view is obtained. The Town Hall is a commodious edifice, built in 1811. The Corn Exchange is situated in Exchange street. Jedburgh is a burgh of very ancient erection, and, from a charter granted by William the Lion, appears to have been a place of note previous to 1165. It has the honour of parochial precedency, being the oldest parish in Scotland of which any historical record has been transmitted to posterity. Prior to the Union it was a place of importance, and one of the principal towns in the south of Scotland. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and a council elected by the constituents resident within the royalty. The lords justiciary and lords commissioners of the jury court hold courts here for the south circuit (which includes the counties of Roxburgh, Berwick and Selkirk), generally in April and September and the sheriff holds a court on Mondays and Thursdays for the despatch of civil business, and a small debt court and the ordinary sheriff court every Thursday. The justices of the peace hold their court on the first Tuesday in every month; and here also the court of general quarter session sits. The burgh formerly joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, and Lauder in returning one member to Parliament, but under the Redistribution Act, is now merged in the county. The manufacture of tweeds, blankets, plaidings, &c., is carried on to a large extent, and in the neighbourhood are many corn mills. Considerable emolument is derived from the sale of the produce of the orchards and gardens that surround the town. There are places of worship belonging to the Establishment, the Free Church of Scotland, the United Presbyterian body, Independents, Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics. In connection with the town flourishes a horticultural society. The market is held on Tuesday, and the fairs on the first Tuesday in March, 16th May if Tuesday, if not the Tuesday preceding, first Tuesday after 26th May, 20th July (or two days after St. Boswell's), 20th August if Tuesday, if not the Tuesday preceding, 25th September, and servants hiring, first Tuesday in November. Jedburgh parish comprises an area of 22,585 acres; the population in 1881 was returned at 5,147, and the town 3,402 of that number.

BEDRULE is a parish in the centre of the county, bounded on the east by Jedburgh, on the north by Ancrum, by Hobkirk on the south, and on the west by Cavers. The village of Bedrule consists of the parish church, school, and a few scattered houses, and is distant from Jedburgh about four miles. Acreage, 3,917; population in 1881, 269

CRAILING is a parish and a village, the latter situated about 4 miles N.N.E. of Jedburgh and 6½ S. from Kelso, bounded on the west by Ancrum, on the south by Jedburgh, on the north by Roxburgh, and on the east by Eckford. There are two small villages in the parish, CRAILING and NISBET. The places of worship and school are at Crailing. The North British Railway intersects the parish, and there is a station at Nisbet. Acreage, 5,966; population in 1881, 638.

HOWNAM is a parish situate amongst the Cheviot Hills, bounded on the south by the county of Northumberland, on the east and north by Morebattle, and on the west by Eckford, Jedburgh and Oxnam. The village of Hownam is distant from Jedburgh about nine miles, and from Kelso about twelve. Acreage, 15,075; population in 1881, 263.

OXNAM is a parish on the borders of Northumberland, bounded on the east by Hownam, on the north and west by Jedburgh and Southdean. The village of Oxnam is four miles from Jedburgh, which is the nearest town and railway station. Acreage, 21,160; population in 1881, 683.

SOUTHDEAN is a parish in the southern part of Teviotdale, bounded on the north by Jedburgh, on the south by Castleton and the county of Northumberland, on the west by Hobkirk, and on the east by Oxnam. The parish church and school are at CHESTERS, a hamlet in this parish. Acreage, 27,929; population in 1881, 724.

KELSO,

ECKFORD, EDNAM, HEITON, MAKERSTOUN, NENTHORN (Berwickshire), ROXBURGH, SMAILHOLM, SPROUSTON, AND STICHILL.

KELSO is a burgh of barony, a considerable market town, and the capital of its parish, 42 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 10 N. from Jedburgh, 23 S.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 60 N. by E. from Carlisle, and 6 W. from the English border. It is connected with the North British and the Newcastle and Berwick railways by branches which approach within a short distance of the town, and it occupies an extensive plain on the north bank of the Tweed, opposite the confluence of the Teviot with that river, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful amphitheatre of wood-clad hills. Kelso is of very great antiquity, and has been the scene of many memorable events in early history. Its border situation subjected it to almost continual incursions of enemies, and to several conflagrations. To the latter infliction, however, it is indebted for the modern and uniform style which now characterises its appearance. It is built after the manner of the Flemish towns, having a spacious square in the centre, from which diverge four principal streets. On the east side of the square stands an elegant town hall, erected in 1816, which is adorned with a fine portrait of the grandfather of the present Duke of Roxburghe. In this hall periodical courts are held by the sheriff, justices of the peace, and magistrates, as are also the meetings of the commissioners of police. On the ground floor is a large enclosed piazza, which, on market days, is opened for the use of the farmers and others attending the market. In the Wood Market has been erected a very elegant Corn Exchange, which has proved a great boon to the farmers and merchants. The bridge, which crosses the Tweed was built in the beginning of the present century, at a cost of about £18,000, after a plan by the late Sir John Rennie, the architect of Waterloo Bridge, London, of which it may be said to be a model. It consists of five arches of equal span, and is well worthy of the stranger's notice, particularly for the beautiful views obtatained from it, which are not surpassed on any other part of the Tweed. About 200 yards above this bridge occurs the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. On the north bank of the Tweed is Floors Castle, the princely residence of the Duke of Roxburghe, and on the south bank of the Teviot is Springwood Park, the beautiful seat of Sir George Brisbane Douglas, Bart. In the centre may be seen the ancient castle of Roxburgh, with the Eildon hills in the distance, while on the right hand are the venerable remains of Kelso Abbey, founded by David I. in 1128. This magnificent ruin is entirely of the transition Norman style of architecture, of which it is a splendid specimen. During the repairs of this monument of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence some years ago, on removing the rubbish from the base of the structure, the fragment of a bell was found, which is supposed to have been, when perfect, about 3 feet in diameter and one ton and a half in weight. At the east end of the town is situated Shedden Park, which was presented to the inhabitants by Mrs. Robertson, of Ednam House, in memory of her nephew, who perished in the search for Sir John Franklin.

The government of the town is vested in a senior and two junior magistrates and a body of commissioners of police, who derive their powers from the Scotch Burgh Police Act. The town is lighted with gas, and is well supplied with spring and river water, and of all the towns on the border it stands pre-eminent for its cleanly and orderly appearance. The principal branches of business are comprised in an extensive manure and oilcake manufactory, an iron foundry, and carriage building and fishing tackle works. There are also many corn mills in the neighbourhood. The domestic trade of Kelso is well supported, and many of the shops are furnished with very extensive stocks of all sorts of goods necessary for the consumption of an inland district. The trading and monetary interests of the town are aided in their transactions by the establishment of five banking houses, branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company Bank, and the Royal Bank of Scotland. The principal hotel is the Cross Keys. There are several places of worship in Kelso, exclusive of the Established church, some of them presenting very fine and handsome exteriors. Their designations, &c. are given on a subsequent page.

Among the several benevolent institutions supported by the inhabitants may be enumerated the Dispensary, founded in 1777, which has lately been reorganised, the scheme for extending its usefulness including the employment of a staff of nurses for the treatment of poor persons either within the institution or at their own homes; a society for educating poor children, and a Board school. The other educational establishments are high schools for boys and girls. The literary institutions include several libraries, and two news and reading rooms, a Mechanics' Institute and Working Men's Club, an association entitled the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society, and several benefit societies. Two newspapers are published in Kelso, under the titles of the Kelso Mail (established in 1797), and the Kelso Chronicle (in 1832). Kelso, which is at all times a place of gaiety and respectability, has additional liveliness imparted to it by the occasional rendezvous of the Royal Caledonian Hunt, and and by the steeplechases in spring, and horse races which take place in the autum, they being superior to any meetings of the kind in Scotland. The course, which is much admired, is situated about a mile to the northward. On it is an excellent stand on the model of that at Doncaster. The weekly market, chiefly for corn and in the winter months for store cattle, is held on Friday, and a market for fat cattle and sheep is held once a fortnight, on Monday. An annual fair and also the annual show of the Border Union Agricultural Society take place on the 5th of August. Acreage of the parish, 5,384; population in 1881, 5,235, of which the town contained 4,687.

ECKFORD, a small parish and village, the latter situated near the confluence of the Kale and the Teviot, 3½ miles S. from Kelso and about 2 from Kirkbank station on the Roxburgh and Jedburgh branch of the North British railway. Population in 1881, 912.

EDNAM, or Edenham, is a small village and parish, the former pleasantly situated on the small river Eden, about two miles and a half north-east from Kelso. It is celebrated as the birthplace of the poet Thomson, his father having been incumbent of the parish; a monument, erected to the memory of the poet stands on an eminence near the village. The land of the parish ranks among the finest in this fertile district, and is exceedingly well cultivated and enclosed. About two miles from Ednam is situated the beautiful mansion of Newton Don, the seat of Charles B. Balfour, Esq. Acreage of the parish, 3,849; population in 1881, 613.

MAKERSTOUN is a small agricultural parish on the north bank of the river Tweed, bounded on the east by Kelso, on the north by Smailholm, and on the west by Mertoun, distant from Kelso five miles. Makerstoun House, the seat of Miss Scott Makdougall, is in this parish. The nearest railway stations are at Rutherford and Roxburgh. Acreage, 2,865; population in 1881, 381, NENTHORN is a parish in Berwickshire, but abutting on Roxburghshire, about four miles from Kelso, two from Stichill, seven from Earlstown, and about the same distance from Greenlaw; situated on a gentle slope from the river Eden; its length is about four and a half miles, and its width about three and a half. In this parish is situate Nenthorn House, the seat of F. L. Roy, Esq. Acreage, 3,454; population in 1881, 453.

ROXBURGH is a small village and parish, situate about three miles from Kelso, bounded by Makerstoun and Kelso on the north, Maxton on the west, Ancrum on the south, and Crailing and Eckford on the east, and is a station on the North British railway. Acreage, 7,781; population in 1881, 1,012.

SMAILHOLM is a small agricultural village and parish, situate about six miles from Kelso, and in the north-eastern part of the county. The nearest railway (for goods) is at Fans Loanend, about four miles from the village. Acreage, 4,194; population in 1881, 445.

SPROUSTON is a parish and village situate about two and a half miles from Kelso, on the south bank of the river Tweed. The North-Eastern railway passes through the parish, and there is a station here. Acreage, 8,635; population in 1881, 1,026.

STICHILL is a small village and parish situate about three miles from Kelso, and the same distance from Hume, and is bounded on the east by Eccles, on the north by Greenlaw, and on the south by Ednam and Nenthorn. Stichill House, the seat of G. A. Baird, Esq., in this parish, is a fine structure in the Elizabethan style of architecture. Acreage, 6,898; population in 1881, 343.

LILLIESLEAF, BOWDEN AND MIDLEM.

LILLIESLEAF is a village and parish, the former 10 miles from Galashiels, the same distance from Jedburgh, 8 from Hawick 6 from Selkirk, 3 from New Belses station, and 4 from Hassendean station on the North British Railway. The places of worship consist of the parish church and a united Presbyterian church. There are two schools in the village—a Board school and Currie's Female school. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and trades connected therewith. The parish, which is four miles in length by nearly three in breadth, is intersected by the Ale water. The lands are under good tillage, and the district has a very pleasing appearance. Acreage of the parish, 6,673; population in 1881, 718, and of the village, 315.

BOWDEN village is 2½ miles from Melrose and a mile and a half from St. Boswells Railway station, standing in a low situation, through which a rivulet passes to the Tweed. The places of worship comprise the parish church, a very ancient building, and a Free church; there is also a Board school in the village. The parish comprises a portion of the Eildon hills, from whence the land gently declines in well cultivated and enclosed fields. The vestiges of a Roman military road, with circular stations or encampments, may be traced in this district, and a ruin at HOLYDEAN, at an early period a strong fortification, and the ancient residence of the now noble family of Roxburghe. Within the parish, besides Bowden, is the small village of MIDHOLM, or Midlem, pleasingly situated on rising ground, two miles from Lilliesleaf. Here is a Board school and a chapel for the Original Secession. Acreage of Bowden parish, 7,667; population in 1881, 769.

MELROSE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF NEWSTEAD, GATTONSIDE, DARNICK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MELROSE is a parish and free burgh of barony. The town, small and ancient, is 36 miles S. by E. from Edinburgh, 12 S. W. from Jedburgh, seven N.E. from Selkirk, and four S.E. from Galashiels, delightfully situated at the foot of the Eildon Hills, and on the line of the North British Railway. The station, a spacious and handsome erection, presents a very fine appearance, and being situated on rising ground, may be seen from all parts of the neighbourhood. The town is built in the form of a triangle, with small streets leading out at the corners. In the centre stands the cross, a structure supposed to be co-eval with the abbey. There are a number of new and handsome houses, in the western suburbs, while others exhibit proofs of great antiquity, presenting decorated stones that once undoubtedly formed a portion of the superb abbey for which the place is so celebrated. The Corn Exchange stands in the Market place; it is a handsome structure and contains an elegant hall, capable of accommodating an audience of about 500. There are four hotels and posting houses in the town, namely, the Abbey, the George, the Station, and the King's Arms. The Ormiston Institute, recently erected out of a sum of £4,000 bequeathed by Mr. Charles W. Ormiston, of Melrose, comprises reading and smoking rooms, billiard room, &c.; the cost, including the furniture, being £1,700. The remainder of the capital sum is held as an endowment fund. A large pond for skating during the winter months has been constructed at the west end of the town. The Abbey of Melrose, one of the largest and most magnificent Gothic structures in the kingdom, adjoins the town on the south side of the Tweed. On viewing the exterior of this noble pile of building from the south it has a most imposing effect; but on entering the interior, the lofty Gothic columns, in a double row, supporting the majestic arched roof—the elegance and variety of its sculpture, the multiplicity of its statues, the beauty of its stone, and the symmetry of its parts, must strike every stranger with profound admiration. It was founded in 1136 by King David, who dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, and endowed it with extensive privileges and almost princely revenues. The monks where of the Cistercian order, and this monastery was the mother foundation of all establishments of that order in Scotland. It is somewhat remarkable that it is only within the limit of the present century that Melrose Abbey became an object of interest to the tourist. That interest was principally awakened by the publication of the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," a poem by Sir Walter Scott, whose description of this venerable time recalling fabric induced the visits of strangers from all quarters. At the beginning of the present century, and until the erection of the present church on the Weirhill, the abbey was used as the parish church. There are churches belonging to the Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Independent denominations. About two miles east from the town is the site of the still more ancient abbey of Old Melrose, founded in 664, and said to be the first abbey of the Culdees settled in this part of the kingdom. All that remains, however, of the old structure, is a small ruin on a peninsula formed by the Tweed, whose banks around it are lofty and wooded, varied with perpendicular rocks, jutting out into the river like buttresses; the situation is in the highest degree pleasant, commanding a fine view of the valley of the Tweed. About a mile nearer the town of Melrose is the village of NEWSTEAD, near which was another abbey, called the "Red Abbey." About a mile north of Melrose is the Waverley Hydropathic Establishment, a noble and stately building. The situation is dry and airy, and well sheltered from the prevailing westerly winds. It commands a splendid view to the south and east, including the romatic three-peaked Eildon Hills, and some beautiful stretches of the river Tweed, the valley of which lies open as far as Leaderfoot, and the view is bounded by the heights of Bemersyde. The site of the building is the well-known Skirmish Hill, where was fought one of the last Border frays of the district. Previous to the abolition of hereditary jurisdictions, Melrose was a burgh of regality; but now it is a free burgh of barony, and governed by a baron bailie chosen by the burgesses. A justice of peace court is held here on the last Wednesday in every month. The banks of the Tweed are clothed with plantations in the finest order, and the land around appears in the highest state of cultivation. The Roxburgh, Berwick and Skelkirk District Lunatic Asylum, situate about three-quarters of a mile from the town, at the foot of the Eildon Hills, and opened in May 1872, is a handsome building, erected at a cost of £57,000, and is capable of accommodating between 200 and 300 patients. The building is beautifully situated, and with the grounds occupy an area of nearly 35 acres. Acreage of the parish, 25,794. Population of the town in 1881, 1,550.

The antique and rural village of GATTONSIDE stands on the north bank of the Tweed, in the parish of Melrose, with which town a communication is maintained by means of a suspension bridge, which was opened on the 26th of October, 1826. For each passenger a charge of a halfpenny was made until Whit Sunday, 1885, when the bridge was made free. The village is surrounded with orchards, and it is computed that a greater quantity of fruit is grown about this place than in any other part of the vale of the Tweed.

DARNICK is a small village in Melrose parish, situated on the road leading to Galashiels, and now almost joined to Melrose town. In the centre of the village stands the ancient stronghold of the lairds of Darnick, that exquisite bit of border antiquity, Darnick Tower. Population in 1881, 448.

NEW CASTLETON

IS a modern village, in an extensive mountainous parish, formerly known by the name of Castletown, but more generally by the popular title of Liddesdale, being in the vale of the Liddle water. The village, which owes its rise to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, and which has superseded the old parish village (a little further up the vale), is 26 miles from Jedburgh, 20 S.E. from Hawick, and 10 N.E. from Canonby; situate in the centre of the lower and more arable part of the district, on the road which proceeds up Liddesdale. It consists principally of two long streets of neat houses, which occupy a haugh on the right bank of the Liddle. Except that a few of the inhabitants are employed by the cotton manufacturers of Carlisle, there is no other business worth mentioning. The parish is upwards of 18 miles in length by 14 in breadth. The northern part is mountainous and bleak, but affords good sheep pasturage. On the east, near the head of the parish, rise the rivers Tyne and Liddle, in the midst of a vast bog, called Dead Water, on account of its stagnant appearance. Mineral springs, which are of considerable repute for their medicinal properties, exist at Flat, Lawston, Thorlies Hope and Tweeden, the last of which exhibits the various stages of the petrifying process. The banks of the river are covered with natural wood and extensive plantations, which afford an infinite variety of the most picturesque scenery. Within the district are the ruins of no less than five churches, and of many castles and fortified places; but the most remarkable object in Liddesdale is the ancient castle of Hermitage, erected in the thirteenth century, by Comyn, Earl of Monteath, and one of the largest fortresses on the border. It has been repaired by the Duke of Buccleuch, and during this operation several small pieces of cannon were found, and a gold ring evidently of very old manufacture, bearing the inscription In Broaderlie Amite. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, Evangelical Union, and one for the United Presbyterians. A mission hall was built in 1888, at a cost of about £1,100 raised by public subscription. There is also a Board school in the village. Fairs are held in April, May, September and November; some of them are for hiring servants. The acreage of the parish is 67,858, and in 1881 it had a population of 2,256, of which the village contained 924.

POST OFFICE, NEW CASTLETON, Margaret Murray, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive at 5 20 a.m. and 7 25 p.m., and are despatched at 9 10 a.m. and 7 10 p.m. —— Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

ST. BOSWELLS,

MAXTON, NEWTOWN ST. BOSWELLS, AND MERTOUN.

ST. BOSWELLS (or LESSUDDEN) is a small village in the parish of its name, 10 miles W. from Kelso, 9 N. from Jedburgh, and 4 E. from Melrose; situated nearly in the centre of the parish, at the east end of a spacious green, and distant about one mile from the St. Boswells station on the North British railway. The village of St. Boswells consists of one long street, running east and west from the green. A few years ago great improvements were effected in the village; an ample supply of water is obtained from Whiterigg Bog. The places of worship comprise the parish church and a Free church. There is also a Board school. The Buccleuch Arms Hotel, much frequented during the hunting season, is situate on the green. Here, too, are the kennels belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch's foxhounds, which pack is the largest in the south of Scotland, and hunts the three counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick. On the green at St. Boswells is held about the 18th of July one of the most important horse fairs in the Scotland. This fair also attracts a large number of salesmen of miscellaneous goods, and it is still frequented by the direct descendants of the gipsies for the disposal of earthen, horn and tin wares. The parish of St. Boswells is three miles in length, by from one and a half to two in breadth, and is beautifully enclosed, planted and cultivated. On the west rise the Eildon Hills, and on the east and north the ground is undulating, the latter quarter ornamented by the fine woods of Dryburgh, separated from the village by the Tweed, which is here a beautiful river, enclosed within high banks; beyond the Dryburgh woods rise hills of various altitudes that bound the prospect. Acreage of the parish 3,155. The population in 1881 was 959.

The parish of MAXTON, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, well enclosed and planted. The village of Maxton is about a mile E. from St. Boswells. On the estate of Littledean, about a mile from the church, are the remains of an old tower, once a strong fortification, and long the residence of the Kerrs, of Littledean. At Lilliard's Edge on the boundary betwixt this parish and that of Ancrum, was fought the famous battle between the Scots and English on the 14th of December, 1544, when the latter were totally routed with the loss of a thousand men slain and made prisoners. Acreage 4,442. Population in 1881, 426.

NEWTOWN ST. BOSWELLS is a small village in the parish of Melrose, situated about three miles south from that town, and one mile from St. Boswells. Large cattle sales are conducted here every alternate Monday by Messrs. John Swan & Sons, and Mr. Alexander Davidson, and there are also important lamb sales in July and August. In the village are situate a Presbyterian church, a Board school and the Railway Hotel. Here, too, is the St. Boswells station on the North British railway. Population in 1881, 450.

MERTOUN is a parish in Berwickshire, abutting on Roxburghshire, extending six miles along the banks of the Tweed. CLINTMAINS is a small village in the parish, and about two miles from St. Boswells village, and three from St. Boswells railway station on the North British line. Here are situate the parish church, manse, and Board school. Dryburgh Abbey is a superb, monastic edifice of cruciform structure, now in ruins, and is much frequented by tourists as being the burial place of Sir Walter Scott. At a short distance from the Abbey is an Ionic temple, built by the late Earl of Buchan, about the year 1817, inside of which is the statue of Apollo, and surmounting the dome is a bust of the author of the "Seasons." His lordship also erected a colossal statue of Sir William Wallace. Acreage, 6,374. Population in 1881, 672.

YETHOLM, LINTON, AND MOREBATTLE.

YETHOLM parish is bounded on the north-east and east by the English border, and divided into nearly equal parts by the water of Bowmont, an excellent trouting stream. The surface is hilly, but covered with verdure, and is pastured by numerous flocks of sheep. Situated on the western boundry is YETHOLM or PRIMSIDE LOCH, measuring nearly a mile and a half in circumference. There are considerable haughs (or meadows) on the banks of the Bowmont; the soil is good, and adapted for wheat. The parish comprises two villages, or rather a village in two parts, situate on either side of the Bowmont; that on the side called TOWN-YETHOLM is about 8 miles S. from Kelso; the other, designated KIRK-YETHOLM, which is an improving place, is about a quarter of a mile on the other side of the stream. Yetholm is now acquiring a reputation as a resort for invalids in the summer, and there is a demand for accommodation beyond what the place can at present supply, but increased accommodation is in progress. A fine view of the vale of Bowmont is had from the street going up the hill, named Starioch. The fairs formerly held at the villages are now discontinued, but an annual sheep show for shepherds' packs is held in October, and a flower and fruit show in September. Colonel Wauchope, of Niddrie, lord of the manor, encourages by his generosity improvements in connection with the village. Yetholm formerly was mostly inhabited by gipsies —a race remarkable for the disorderly lives and dangerous characters, and distinguished by peculiarity of habits from the general body of the community. Now, however, none follow the nomadic life of the tribe, all having betaken themselves to farm labour. The old parish church, which at the time of its demolition was the oldest thatched church in Scotland, is now replaced by an elegant edifice of black stone, the windows and corners being faced with white. Besides the Established church there are one each for the members of the United Presbyterian and Free Churches. Acreage of the parish, 5,960; population in 1881, 1,045.

LINTON is a strictly agricultural parish, extending nine miles in length by three in breadth; bounded by Sprouston on the north, Northumberland on the east, Eckford on the west, and Yetholm and Morebattle on the south. It is separated from the latter parish by the Kaile. Besides that stream it has two small lochs, one of which abounds with trout, the other with eels. The land, which rises from the Kaile, is under the best system of cultivation. The church, which is beautifully situated on a high sand mound, is an old edifice, remodelled internally. There is an old carving of the legend of the "Worm of Wormington" on the outer wall. Acreage, 6,393; population in 1881, 543.

The parish of MOREBATTLE is about nine miles in length, with a mean breadth of four. It is bounded by Linton and Yetholm on the north, Eckford on the west, Hownam on the south, and the county of Northumberland on the east. The greater part of the land is hilly and pastoral, the low grounds only being arable. The Kaile and Bowmont run through the parish, both waters affording excellent sport to the angler. Near the former stream, at the distance of 7½ miles from Kelso, and 10 from Jedburgh, stands the village of MOREBATTLE, which is also becoming a summer resort, more accommodation being constantly provided. The ancient and more correct mode of spelling the name is Morebotle, which signifies "the dwelling place at the Marsh." The vestiges of ancient camps and various ruins, particularly Whitton Castle and Corbet House, indicate this parish to have been the frequent scenes of warfare. The places of worship are Established and Free churches and one for United Presbyterians. Acreage of the parish, 22,334; population in 1881, 1,003, the village numbering 322.

SELKIRKSHIRE.

THIS small county, of irregular form, lies in the south of Scotland, bounded by Roxburghshire on the east and south-east, on the west by the counties of Dumfries and Peebles, and on the south and south-west by Dumfries-shire. The county extends twenty-seven miles from south-west to north-east, and is seventeen and a half miles in breadth, exclusive of a small detached par on the east Its area comprehends 257 square miles, or 164,545 acres, of which nearly 2,000 acres are under water. In size Selkirk stands as the twenty-fourth, and in population twenty-seventh of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—This border county was formerly designated the "Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest," from being in a great measure the vale of the Ettrick and its tributary streams, and from its being covered with wood. It was stocked with large herds of deer, and formed a favourite scene for the enjoyment of the chase by the Scottish monarchs. In many of the royal charters it is entitled "The Forest," and before regular sheriffs were appointed it was placed under the jurisdiction of a keeper, who generally held the office of constable of the King's Castle at Selkirk. The ancient history of this county is so intimately associated with that of Roxburghshire (already briefly detailed), that but few incidents worthy of special notice exclusively belong to the district. Unlike Roxburghshire, this county contains few or no remains of ecclesiastical establishments, though it possesses a number of ruined "keeps," the seats of feudal strength; and among other objects worthy the inspection of the antiquary is a large portion of a stupendous work of the Romanised Britons called the "Catrail," once a vast fosse, having a rampart on either side, constructed during the fifth century as a strong line of defence against the invading Saxons.

SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—With the exception of a very narrow portion on its eastern side, the county may be said to be a continual alternation of hill and dale, and many of the eminences rise to a considerable height. The principal vales are those of the Ettrick and Yarrow, besides a portion of the vale of the Tweed and the Gala; from these valleys there shoot out many "cleughs" and "hopes," that run up for some distance between the heights; these vales, as well as the waters (noticed hereafter) which pour through them, have been repeatedly the theme of Scottish as well as English lyrists. Around Galashiels and Selkirk the hills are now subjected to the plough, and in these situations wheat is raised at a considerable elevation above the level of the sea. In the upper valleys of Ettrick and Yarrow, tillage is confined to the haughs and low grounds contiguous. The principal mountains, with their altitudes, are—Blackhouse Hills, 2,370 feet; Windlestrae Law, 2,295; Law Kneis, 1,900; the Three Brethren, 1,978; Black Andrew, 1,966; Pentlaw, 1,964; Wardlaw, 1,900; Minchmoor, 1,877; Hangingshaw Law, 1,780; and Peatlaw, 1,557. Throughout the county generally, agriculture is as well understood and practised as in any district of the kingdom. Great attention is paid to sheep farming and the improvement of the breed of sheep; this was stimulated, and kept up with great success, by the praiseworthy conduct of the late Lord Napier, who, at the termination of the war, betook himself to the vale of Ettrick, and commenced farming, as an amusement. The shire is almost wholly stocked with white-faced sheep, except in a high tract of country towards the sources of its rivers, of which Hindhope, on the Ettrick, and Lawdhope, on the Yarrow, are the lowest points. Of minerals, none of the more useful have yet been found in this county, it being equally deficient of coal, lime, and sandstone; in some parts, however, abundance of whinstone is obtained, and a deal of granite. The manufactures of this county, which will be more particularly noticed in the Directory of Selkirk and Galashiels, consist in both towns of woollens, tweeds, tartans, shawls, and hosiery, together with the tanning of leather and the dressing of sheep and lamb skins. There are also several engineering and machine making establishments.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The county is well watered by the Ettrick, the Yarrow, and the Tweed. The latter valuable river, after draining Peebles-shire, intersects the northern extremity of Selkirkshire from west to east, during a placid course in a deep channel of nine miles, when it is joined by the Ettrick, and, receiving the Gala, passes on to Roxburghshire and Berwick on-Tweed, where it empties itself into the German Ocean. The Gala cannot be esteemed a river of this county; it takes its rise in the parish of Heriot, in the county of Edinburgh, and flowing through a portion of Roxburghshire, falls into the Tweed about a mile below Galashiels. The Yarrow has its source at a place called Yarrow Cleugh, near the rise of the Moffat Water, in Dumfries-shire, and falls into the Ettrick two miles above Selkirk. The county has some small lakes, the chief being St. Mary's Loch, about three miles long, and less than one in breadth, and the Loch of the Lowes, about a mile in length, and a quarter of a mille broad, lying at the head of the Yarrow. The principal railway line with which this county is connected is the North British, and the chief town that lies in its route is Galashiels, and a branch from the main line runs to Selkirk.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—The county of Selkirk contains only three complete parishes, namely, Ettrick, Stow, and Kirkhope, but has portions of seven other parochial divisions. There is a combination Poorhouse at Galashiels, for paupers belonging to the parishes of Galashiels, Selkirk, Melrose, and Yarrow. The only towns are those of Selkirk and Galashiels—the former a royal burgh, but not directly represented in Parliament. This county joins with Peebles-shire in returning a member to the Senate, the gentleman at present sitting being Walter Thorburn, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-9 is 760. The Lord Lieutenant is Lord Polwarth. According to the population returns for 1871, Selkirkshire contained 14,005 inhabitants, and in 1881, 25,564. The valuation of the county in 1888-9 (exclusive of railways), is £57,976; and of railways, £4,258.

GALASHIELS,

WITH CADDONFOOT, CLOVENFORDS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GALASHIELS is a parliamentary burgh and market town of manufacturing celebrity, 31 miles S.S.E. from Edinburgh, 18 E. from Peebles, 6 N. from Selkirk, 4 N.W. from Melrose, and 34 S. by W. from Berwick, partly in the parish of Galashiels and partly in that of Melrose, charmingly situated on both sides of the Gala, about a mile above the confluence of that river with the Tweed. The town joins with Hawick and Selkirk, under the name of the Hawick Burghs, in sending one representative to Parliament, the gentleman sitting at present being Alexander L. Brown, Esq., of Rowantree Butts. It lies on the North British Railway (Waverley route), for which line there is a station in the town; there is also a line to Selkirk, and to Edinburgh, Innerleithen, and Peebles. The parish of Galashiels was formed out of the two old parishes, Lindean, in Roxburghshire, and Boldside, in Selkirkshire, in the early part of the seventeenth century. Galashiels is comparatively of modern erection, the oldest houses not having been built more than a century, whilst the greater number have not existed more than fifty years. It is composed of several streets, most of which run parallel with the river; there are also a large number of handsome villas in the immediate neighbourhood, these being the residences of the manufacturers and merchants of the town. The Old, or High Town, as it is now called, contains the parish church, manse, and a few of the original respectable dwellings; and this portion has also been much improved and enlarged by new erections. It is situated on a sort of table-land overlooking the picturesque vale of the Gala. The river is here crossed by six bridges, two being for foot passengers only. The Public Hall, erected by a joint-stock company, is a handsome building, situated in High street, two storeys high, the upper storey being used for public meetings, concerts, &c. A drill hall, erected for the 1st Selkirkshire Volunteers, is well adapted for concerts, public meetings, &c. There are also four other halls capable of accommodating from 300 to 500 persons. The town enjoys the advantage of a library, maintained by the rates, according to the Free Libraries Act, and containing at present upwards of 5,000 volumes in almost every department of literature. Reading rooms are attached, and are well supplied with daily and weekly newspapers and magazines. For many years Galashiels has enjoyed a great distinction in the manufacture of tweeds. This is the staple of the place, and there are many houses engaged in it. This town, in common with others in the south interested in manufactures, sustained for a long period great inconvenience from its distance from seaports, railways, and collieries; but the extension of the North British Railway to those parts has to a great extent obviated the obstructions that commerce had previously laboured under. The manufacturers and weavers meet annually on the Friday nearest the 10th of October, for the purpose of electing a deacon of their trade, and conferring on matters therewith connected. The business and commerce of the town and district are facilitated by branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank. Other trades flourishing in Galashiels are those in connection with coal, corn, timber and leather tanning. A small debt court is held in the town six times a year. Two newspapers are published, the Border Advertiser and the Scottish Border Record, which have a large circulation in the border counties.

The places of worship in Galashiels comprise four churches of the Establishment, two of the Free Church of Scotland, three for the United Presbyterians, one for Episcopalians, two chapels for the Baptists and one each for Roman Catholics and the Evangelical Union. St. Paul's Established church, in Scott street, is a fine edifice, erected at a cost of £15,000, raised by voluntary contributions. It is built of red freestone, from the Belses quarry, and is in the florid Gothic style of architecture, the architects being Messrs. Hay and Henderson, who restored St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh. The old Ladhope Free Church has been replaced by a new building in the early English pointed style of architecture, at a cost of about £5,000. The foundation stone was laid in February, 1885, by Lord Reay, the architects being Messrs. M'Kissack and Rowan, of Glasgow. It is built of whinstone of the district, with traceries and spire of freestone from the Swinton quarry. Educational matters are conducted by three School Boards—one for the burgh, one for the parish, and one for that portion of Galashiels situate in Melrose parish, there being four schools under the first-mentioned board, and one each under the two latter. There are also schools in connection with the Episcopal and Roman Catholic places of worship, and a private school. A short distance from the town is situated ABBOTSFORD, the beautiful seat of the late Sir Walter Scott. A grain market is held on Tuesday, a fair on the third Wednesday of March, and a live stock sale every alternate Wednesday. The parish of Galashiels comprises an acreage of 8,440. According to the returns for 1881 the town contained a population of 15,330.

CADDONFOOT is a quoad sacra parish (presbytery of Selkirk) in the north-eastern division of the county, and was erected in 1867. It is partly in the civil parish of Yarrow, and partly in those of Galashiels and Stow, the hamlet of CLOVENFORDS, 3 miles west from Galashiels, being in the latter. Here is a station on the Peebles branch of the North British Railway, and the celebrated vineries and orchid nurseries of Messrs. William Thomson and Sons. About a mile from Clovenfords is situated the church, a small stone building, and the Board school. Within the parish are also Ashiestiel, the residence of the late Sir Walter Scott previous to his removal to Abbotsford, and Laidlawstiel, the residence of Lord Reay, of Durness.

SELKIRK,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ASHKIRK, ETTRICK, HEATHERLIE, KIRKHOPE, AND YARROW.

SELKIRK is an ancient town, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its county and parish; 38 miles S.S.E. from Edinburgh, 22 E. by S. from Peebles, 12 N.N.W. from Hawick, 8 S.W. from Melrose, and 6 S. from Galashiels, occupying a rising ground, at the foot of which flows the river Ettrick. The place derives its name from a kirk established here at an early date, when the locality became destinguished as a hunting seat of the king. In the oldest charter it is called Seleschirche, Sele chyre or Sel chire, which signify the great or good church. When a second kirk was erected in the vicinity, after the foundation of a monastery by David I. in 1113, the prior place received the dignified title of Selkirk Regis, while the village of the monks was denominated Selkirk Abbatis. The monks of Selkirk did not, however, remain long settled in the town; they were removed to a more pleasant locality by their royal patron. Of the Castle of Selkirk, at which David occasionally resided, little is known, and its size cannot now be satisfactorily ascertained. Formerly Selkirk exhibited but an indifferent appearance in its buildings and their arrangement; but a spirit of improvement has been developed which has imparted to the place an aspect far more prepossessing. Many handsome private houses have been built in the vicinity of the town. The Market place is embellished with a very beautiful monument to Sir Walter Scott. In High street there is a monument in remembrance of Mungo Park, the African traveller, who was a native of Foulshields, in this county; it is the work of Andrew Currie, a native artist. In 1870 new buildings were completed for the business of the county, including sheriff's court room, and offices for sheriff's clerk, procurator fiscal, and other officials. The old Town Hall in the market place is used for burgh courts, meetings of town council, police commissioners, and other public bodies. Selkirk was in past ages celebrated for the making of brogues (a description of single soled shoes); tradition carries the existence of this trade so far back as the period of the battle of Flodden, in which conflict, it is asserted, the brogue makers or "souters" of Selkirk took a distinguished part. As a further proof of the consequence and ability of the professors of this craft, it appears from the town records that when the Highland army, in 1745, commanded the magistrates of Edinburgh to furnish six thousand pairs of shoes, these civic officials made a call upon the burgh of Selkirk for no less than a third of the quantity, which was supplied, and soon after a few hundreds more. The principal manufactures now carried on consist of various descriptions of woollen goods—tweeds, tartans, plaids and shawls, and wool spinning and tanning. A railway is open from here to Galashiels, where it joins the Waverley line of the North British system, thus giving to Selkirk railway communication with all parts of Great Britain. The town possesses three principal inns—namely the County, the Fleece, and Hogg's Station Hotel. Branches of the British Linen Company Bank, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland are settled here, and there is a Savings Bank. The introduction of manufactures has caused a great augmentation of the population of the town, and a material extension of its ancient limits. As a royal burgh, Selkirk is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and eleven councillors, one-third of whom retire annually. The sheriff's court is held on Friday. The magistrates hold criminal courts as occasion requires. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday of March, May and August, and last Tuesday of October, and special justice of peace courts when found necessary. The places of public worship are two churches of the Establishment, a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, an Episcopalian, a Roman Catholic, a Congregational, a Baptist, and an Evangelical Union chapel. The institutions for education in Selkirk consist of the burgh school and the Knowe Park Grammar school, under the Burgh School Board, the Philiphaugh school under the Landward School Board, and a Roman Catholic school. The inhabitants support a subscription library and a Mechanics' Institute. There is also a free library. About one-third of the area of the ecclesiastical parish, embracing the lower part of the town, was disjointed in January, 1885, from the original parish, and erected into the quoad sacra parish of HEATHERLIE, in which are situate a small church of the Establishment and the Philiphaugh Board school mentioned above.

The rivers Ettrick and Yarrow form a junction about a mile and a half above Selkirk, and empty their waters into the Tweed, about two miles below the town. The beautiful mansion of Bowhill, belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, the stately ruins of Newark Castle, the fertile straths, and the serpentine windings of the two rivers, together with many elegant seats, form beautiful scenery, romantic and diversified. Philiphaugh, the residence of William Strang Steele, Esq., is a beautiful castellated mansion; amongst others may be noted The Haining, Sunderland Hall, and Broadmeadows. The market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the 5th April and 31st October. There is also an auction mart, where sales are held for cattle, &c. fortnightly on Wednesday. Acreage of the parish, 22,559; population in 1881, 7,432, and of the town, 6,090.

ETTRICK is a parish situated in the south-west of Selkirkshire, bordering on Dumfries-shire. The Established church, situate about the centre of the parish, which is very mountainous, is 19 miles S.W. from Selkirk. There is also a Free church, serving for the two parishes of Ettrick and Kirkhope, and a Board school. Thirlestane Castle, the residence of Lord Napier and Ettrick, is situated in Ettrick. Acreage, 42,387; population in 1881, 397.

KIRKHOPE parish is in the presbytery of Selkirk. It formerly formed part of the parish of Yarrow, from which it was disjointed in 1851. The parish is very hilly, there being eight hills in the parish above the height of 1,000 feet. A church of the Establishment and two Board schools are situated at ETTRICK BRIDGE END, a small village in Kirkhope, seven miles south-west from Selkirk. There is also a school supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. Acreage, 22,724; population in 1881, 547.

YARROW is a parish in the presbytery of Selkirk, lying south-west from that town. The parish is very picturesque, and its praises have been well sung by Hogg, the "Ettrick Shepherd," to whose memory there is a monument at St. Mary's Loch. This loch is a great resort for visitors in summer, and excellent accommodation can be had at the Rodono Hotel. The Established church, situate about the centre of the parish, is nine miles south-west by west from Selkirk. There are also a Free church and a Board school in the parish. Acreage, 41,046; population in 1881, 639.

ASHKIRK is a parish partly in Roxburghshire and partly in Selkirkshire, about two-thirds being in the former county. The village is 5½ miles from Hawick, its post town, and 6½ from Selkirk, on the river Ale, a tributary of the Teviot. Here are situate the parish church and the Board school. There is also a Free church in the parish, and Ashkirk House, the seat of Alexander Cochrane, Esq.; The Woll, the seat of G. W. Bell, Esq.; and Sinton, the seat of John Scott, Esq. Acreage, 11,708; population in 1881, 500.

STIRLINGSHIRE,

ONE of the most important and beautiful counties in Scotland, is situated partly in the Highlands and partly in the Lowlands. It is bounded on the east by the county of Linlithgow and the river Forth, on the south and west by Dumbartonshire, on the north by the shires of Perth and Clackmannan (which latter county touches it also on the east), and on the south and east by portions of Lanarkshire. Its boundaries are in many places distinctly marked by watercourses or lakes—the principal boundary line on the north being the Forth, the Avon on the east, the Kelvin river on the south, the Endrick water on the south-west, and Loch Lomond on the west. The figure of the county is extremely singular, and has been fancifully likened both to a fish and a serpent; its tail, which diminishes to an apex at the north, is inserted between the counties of Dumbarton and Perth; and its head is suddenly turned towards the shires of Lanark on the south, and Linlithgow on the south-east. Its length from east to west is thirty-six miles, but following the curvature of its form from east to its northern point, it will measure upwards of forty-five miles; its breadth varies from twelve to twenty miles, except where it declines towards the north, and here the distance across is very trifling. The shire comprises an area of 447 square miles, or 286,338 acres. In size Stirling stands as nineteenth, and in population as the ninth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county, from its situation between the Firths of Forth and Clyde, and on the direct passage from the northern to the southern parts, has been the scene of many memorable transactions; and there are few counties where monuments of antiquity are so frequently to be met with; neither does it yield to any in point of modern improvements or in the beauties of scenery. The wall of Antonius built for the purpose of protecting the Roman conquests on the south, traversed the lower division of the county and has left some slight traces for the investigation of the antiquary; the remains of Roman forts are also distinguishable, and weapons and coins of that invading power have been occasionally dug from the soil. After the overthrow of the Pictish sovereignty, Stirlingshire with all the country on the south side of the Forth, was for some years under the dominion of the Northumbrian Saxons; and at a later period it passed quietly under the government of the Scottish sovereigns. Subsequently, considerable importance was attached to the county from the position and strength of the castle of Stirling (which will be found noticed more particularly under the head of that town), commanding as it did the most important pass betwixt the northern and southern districts of the kingdom. In the twelfth century it was much benefited by David I. who erected religious houses, particularly that at Cambuskenneth, within its bounds; and the inmates of these establishments being generally learned men, their pious authority tended to civilise the rude manners of the inhabitants.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—This county, as has been said, is partly Highland and partly Lowland. The former, which is the western quarter and adjacent to Loch Lomond, is a mountainous district; here the majestic Ben Lomond rises to the height and more than three thousand feet. East from this Highland part the land becomes flat, or gently inclining towards the Forth of the Endrick. In the centre of the county the ground is again elevated into a series of hills, of which those of the greatest altitude are from thirteen to fifteen hundred feet; from one of these eminences, in Kilsyth parish, there is obtained one of the finest views in Scotland; it is computed to embrace an extent of 12,000 square miles. Many of the hills in the central, and more especially in the southern division, have their sides and even their summits clothed with a fine grass sward, which affords excellent pasturage for sheep. The eastern division of the county consists of beautiful carse land, in many places quite flat, and in others presenting a succession of inclined planes, gradually rising towards the south from the rich valley of the Forth. In this quarter the county has experienced improvements of the most extensive and beneficial character; and it now exhibits the pleasing spectacle of fertile meadows, fields in the highest stage of tillage, with plantations, pleasure grounds, gardens, and orchards, all in the most exuberant vegetation and fruitfulness. Almost every variety of soil to be met with in Scotland occurs in Stirlingshire; but the most common and the most fertile in the county is the alluvial or carse land, which occupies many thousand acres on the banks of the Forth. In this species of soil there are beds of shells, clay, marl and moss. In the western and central districts, on the banks of the rivers, the land is generally of a light and gravelly description; while patches of rich loam present their surface to the husbandman in other parts of the county. From the great variety of soil, the system of agriculture in Stirlingshire naturally cannot be uniform, nor its produce equally abundant or limited to any particular species. Large crops of wheat, barley, beans, peas, turnips, potatoes, &c., are raised, and the culture of artificial grasses has also been very generally adopted in this county. The extensive ranges of moor in the upland district are exclusively devoted to the feeding of numerous flocks of sheep, which are of the old black-faced or Highland breed; there are but few cattle reared, the county being sufficiently supplied by the drovers from the Highlands. The shire is inferior to few districts of Scotland in the quantity and variety of its mineral productions, the most abundant of which are coal, ironstone, limestone and sandstone. The principal coal pits are in the southern base of the Lennox hills; but this valuable article is also obtained in the eastern district, in the vicinity of the Forth and Clyde Canal, and in such quantities as not only to be sufficient for home consumption, but by means of the Union Canal to supply the metropolis. Ironstone, limestone and sandstone are found in the same districts with the coal. Veins of silver were discovered and wrought about a century ago, but the working of them was soon discontinued; copper, lead, and cobalt have likewise been raised at different periods, but not to any considerable amount. The staple manufacture of this county is iron goods, both cast and malleable, the chief seat of which is at Carron, near Falkirk. The making of nails for carpenters' work is also carried on in several parishes (especially in that of Saint Ninians) to a considerable extent; at Saint Ninians are likewise manufactured tartans; at Stirling, carpets, tartans and shawls; and at Bannockburn (ever memorable for the decisive defeat of the army of Edward by the triumphant Bruce), tweeds are manufactured; while in other towns and localities are calico printing works, large distilleries, tanneries, breweries, chemical and other establishments.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS AND RAILWAYS.—The Forth is the principal river in Stirlingshire. It takes its rise from a spring near the summit of Ben Lomond, and, after receiving in its course the Teith, the Allan, and the Devon, expands into that noble estuary called the Firth of Forth. Between Stirling and Alloa, a distance of only seven miles in a direct line, the stretch is more than twenty by the course of the river, owing to the numerous windings, which are termed "the links of the Forth." The next river in magnitude is the Carron, which has its source in the central district, and is navigable for vessels of large burthen for about two miles from the place where it forms a junction with the Forth. The other streams are the Avon, the Endrick, the Blank, and the Kelvin, none of which, however, require particular notice. Besides these waters, the county has the advantage of the Forth and Clyde Canal and the Union Canal, which is of paramount importance to the commerce of this productive and flourishing district. There are also numerous springs, but the most noted are the Airthrey Wells at Bridge of Allan, the waters of which contain saline and other properties, possessing medicinal virtues in the curing of skin and other diseases, and are largely drank by the great number of persons who resort hither for that purpose. The eminences of great altitude above the level of the sea are—Ben Lomond (before mentioned), 3,232 feet; Alda Hill, 1,600; and Campsie Fells, 1,500 feet. The county is intersected by the Caledonian Railway, and by the Forth and Clyde and the Edinburgh and Glasgow sections of the North British line, with several branches from each, thus affording facilities of communication with all parts of the kingdom.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Stirlingshire comprises twenty-two complete parishes, and portions of four others. It contains two parliamentary burghs—Stirling (which is the only royal burgh in the county), and Falkirk; the former joins with Culross, Queensferry, Dunfermline, and Inverkeithing in returning a member to the Legislature (Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman), and Falkirk is associated in representation with Linlithgow, Lanark, Airdrie and Hamilton (William Pirrie Sinclair, Esq.) The county sends a third representative, the present member being J. C. Bolton, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 is 12,469. The Lord Lieutenant is the Earl of Dunmore. According to the Government returns for 1871, the population amounted to 98,218, comprising 48,215 males, and 50,003 females; in 1881 there were 56,296 males and 56,147 females; total, 112,443; an increase over the previous return of 14,225. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £407,485, excluding railways, canals, and tramways, which amount to £123,276.

AIRTH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AIRTH is an ancient village in the parish of its name, the latter about 6 miles in length by about 2 in breadth, 27 miles W. from Edinburgh, between 8 and 9 E. from Stirling, and 6 N.W. from Falkirk, situate on the banks of the Forth, nearly opposite to Kennetpans. It was at one period a place of considerable importance, but is now greatly decayed. It possesses an Established church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and an Episcopal church at Dunmore. There are three small ports or harbours on the Forth, into which vessels of light burthen can enter, and two ferries across that estuary, at which are boats for the transport of cattle, carriages, &c. to Alloa, and other places on the Fife side. The salmon fishery is prosecuted here with considerable success. Airth Castle, the property of Colonel Graham, is an elegant mansion, in the pure Gothic style, and few buildings are superior to it, either in chaste simplicity of architecture or elegance of design. In the parish are three ancient towers, one at Airth, another at Dunmore, and a third at Powfoulis; that at Airth is of very early date, and is called Wallace's Tower, from the circumstance of that hero having privily entered the building, slain the captain and one hundred men, and released his uncle who was a prisoner; the tower is still in tolerable preservation. Some years ago an anchor was found in Dunmore Hill, at least half a mile from the present course of the river. The whole parish, with the exception of the hills of Airth and Dunmore, is a level tract, and the soil rich and well cultivated. Acreage of Airth parish, 5,477; population in 1881, 1,962, of which the village contained 487.

BALFRON

IS a manufacturing village in the parish of its name, 19 miles N. from Glasgow (its post town), the like distance W. from Stirling, and 16 N.E. from Dumbarton, agreeably situated on the declivity of a hill. The parish is about 11 miles in length and 3 in breadth; bounded on the east and south-east by Garguunock and Fintry, on the south and south-west by Killearn and Drymen, and on the north by Kippen. The works of Messrs. H. W. Pollock & Co., cotton yarn spinners and shirt makers, are situated in this village, and employ a number of the inhabitants, chiefly females. A branch of the British Linen Company Bank is in the village. On the site of the old parish school there has been erected a handsome and commodious public school, with a dwelling-house for the schoolmaster. The school is capable of accommodating about 250 children, and is under the charge of Mr. Robert Sewell, one of the few remaining schoolmasters appointed by the heritors prior to the passing of the Education Act. The village has recently been supplied with water from a spring on Spittal farm, at a cost of £500. There are churches of the Establishment, a Free and two United Presbyterian churches and a Roman Catholic chapel. The annual fair is held on the last Tuesday in May. Acreage of the parish, 7,820. Population in 1881, 1,347.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF LECROPT AND LOGIE, AND THE VILLAGES OF MENSTRIE AND BLAIR LOGIE.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN, a beautifully romantic and fashionable watering place, is situate on the river Allan, about one mile and a half from its confluence with the Forth, three miles from Stirling and nearly at the western extremity of the Ochil hills. A small portion of it is in the parish of Lecropt, and the remainder in that of Logie; and it is also situated in two counties—Stirling and Perth. It is a post town and a station on the Caledonian line. It is resorted to by persons from all parts of the world, as well for pleasure as for restoration of health, on account of the mildness of the climate, the beauty of the surrounding scenery, and the fame of its saline mineral waters. Prior to the discovery of these springs, the place was comparatively little known, and presented to the tourist the unassuming aspect of a small and quiet country hamlet, with a few whitewashed and thatched cottages embosomed in venerable trees; together with an old mill and an ancient public house offering "entertainment for man and beast." Since that period things have greatly changed, and Bridge of Allan is now a large and handsome village, consisting of well-built houses and tasteful villas. There are also several hotels, which for elegance and comfort are not surpassed in Scotland. In 1871 Bridge of Allan was made a burgh under the provisions of the Lindsay Act. Its municipal affairs are managed by nine commissioners, who, from their own number, elect a senior and two junior magistrates. The higher part of the village in the neighbourhood of the wells and Coneyhill is of considerable elevation, forming a terrace or plateau, on which many handsome villas are erected, the sloping sides of the hill being tastefully adorned with trees, commanding a most beautiful and varied series of views, including Stirling, its castle and carse, watered by the Forth, Teith and Allan, with other objects of interest. Numerous improvements were made for the accommodation and recreation of the public by the late Major J. Alexander Henderson, of Westerton, on whose estate a considerable portion of the village is erected. There are churches of the Establishment, a quoad omnia parish church, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a Scotch Episcopal church. Among the various attractions and objects of amusement are billiard and bagatelle rooms, reading rooms and a library, the M'Farlane gallery of sculpture and pictures, two bowling greens, Keir Gardens, the seat of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell, which are open once a week to the public, and several miles of good angling. The late great patron of the place also revived the ancient and interesting game of tilting at the ring, a sport much practised in the reign of James I., and which is still one of the chief among the many attractions of the now famous "Strathallan Meeting," annually held on the first Saturday of August, in the public park, situate at the east end of the village. The lords of the manor are the trustees of the late Sir James E. Alexander, and Lord Abercromby, of Airthrey Castle. The above meeting for Scottish athletic games takes pre-eminence of all others in Scotland. It is, however, chiefly to its mineral wells that Bridge of Allan owes its principal claims to attention. These are situated on the Airthrey estate, the property of Lord Abercromby, and within a few minutes' walk of the village. They are highly celebrated for their medicinal virtues, externally and internally, and have proved of great benefit to numerous invalids. There are convenient baths, and the hotels before noticed are admirably suited for the reception of families and other visitors; while the walks around are beneficial auxiliaries in improving the health of the invalids. Among the business establishments, besides the inns, are large bleaching and dye works, and a paper manufactory. The Bridge of Allan connects the parishes of LECROPT and LOGIE, at the confluence of the Teith and Allan, and is celebrated for the beauty of its scenery. Acreage of the parish of Lecropt, 2,968; population in 1881, 602. Bridge of Allan at the same period numbered 3,005 inhabitants.

LOGIE, or Blair Logie, is a parish situated on the Forth at a part where the counties of Perth, Stirling and Clackmannan meet, a portion of the parish being situated in each of the three counties, the larger portion being on the north bank of the river Forth, opposite Stirling. Within the parish, on a flat peninsula formed by a sinuosity of the river, is the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth Abbey, founded by David I. in 1147, and once a pile of great magnitude. Within the precincts of the Abbey James III. and his Queen were interred. During some excavations made some years ago among the ruins the royal remains were discovered and re-interred. A beautiful tombstone now marks the spot, being erected at the expense of Her Majesty. The plain adjacent to the abbey was the arena on which Wallace obtained his first open and signal victory over the arms of King Edward. The village of Blair Logie is most agreeably situated at the base of the Ochil hills, at the entrance to SHERIFF MUIR and the mouth of Glendevon, and presents a singularly pleasing scene of natural beauty, and is a favourite resort in summer for visitors from the large towns. The kirk, which is small and neat, stands about three miles from Stirling and the same distance from Bridge of Allan. Acreage of the parish, 11,814; population in 1881, 4,696.

MENSTRIE is a village partly in the parish of Logie, in the southern part of Perthshire, and partly in that of Alloa, Clackmannanshire. It is situated at the base of the Ochil hills, on the road from Stirling to Dollar, five miles from the former, five from Bridge of Allan, and two from Alva. The manufacture of different kinds of woollen fabrics gives employment to many of the inhabitants. A quaint old house in the village is pointed out as having been the birth-place of Sir William Alexander, who figured as statesman and poet during the reign of James VI. when he held his court at Stirling. Having become an especial favourite with that monarch he conferred on him the order of knighthood, besides various offices of high trust. He was afterwards created Viscount Canada, and first Earl of Stirling, at the coronation of Charles I. at Holyrood, in consideration of his services, and of having been the founder of the colony of Nova Scotia. The estates at a subsequent period passed into the possession of the Abercrombie family; and it was in the same house, that in the year 1734 was born the celebrated general Sir Ralph Abercrombie. There is a large distillery here. Public Board schools were erected in 1875, at a cost of about £4,000. Population in 1881, 918.

DENNY AND DUNIPACE,

AND THE VILLAGES OF BONNYBRIDGE, DENNY LOANHEAD, AND HAGGS.

DENNY is a thriving and increasing post town in the parish of its name, 29 miles W. from Edinburgh, 20 N.E. from Glasgow, seven S. from Stirling, and five W. from Falkirk. The extent of the parish is about six miles long by an average of four in breadth, bounded on the south-west by the parish of Kilsyth, and on the west and north by the Carron. The contiguous parishes are St. Ninians and Dunipace. It is on the road directly west from Falkirk, through the centre of the county, the road from Stirling to Glasgow also passing through the town. Near this parish is the Forth and Clyde Canal, which is of great benefit to the agriculturists as well as the manufacturers of the district. Places of interest to the tourist in the neighbourhood are the Hermitage, Carron glen, the ruins of Torwood Castle, and Lady's Leap. The banks of the Carron were the scene of many of the most interesting and heroic deeds recorded in Scottish history; but are now that of active industry, and a source of wealth to the surrounding country. The uncommon extent of the water power, as well as the purity of the stream, have caused the establishment of very considerable works on its margin, comprising paper and dyewood mills and chemical works, and in the district are extensive coal and iron mines, the whole furnishing employment to a large and industrious population. The Denny Railway, opened in 1859, is a branch of the Scottish Central section of the Caledonian line, which joins the main line to Larbert nearly four miles distant. The terminus is close to the town, from which run two sub-branches extending to the iron mines in the neighbourhood, by which the ironstone is conveyed to works near Coatbridge, and the coal to Glasgow and Grangemouth for shipment over the country generally. There is a handsome hall, where the Oddfellows' lodge and public meetings are held. There is a lodge of the Ancient Order of Foresters, the Free Gardeners, and Freemasons, and a People's Club and Reading Room. The places of worship are the parish church, Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and a chapel for Roman Catholics, Large public Board schools were erected in 1875 at a cost of about £5,000. Two fairs are held annually, one on the Wednesday before the 12th May, the other on the Wednesday after the 11th November. Acreage of the parish, 8,309; population in 1881, 5,728; the town numbering 4,080.

DUNIPACE is a parish divided into the four districts of Little Denovan, Meikle Denovan, Dunipace and Torwood, bounded on the north and west by the parish of St. Ninians, on the east by Larbert, and on the south by Falkirk and Denny. This locality is rendered famous in the works of most Scottish topographers from possessing two mounts, called "the Hills of Dunipace," the origin of which or the purposes to which they were devoted have exercised the ingenuity and stimulated the researches of the antiquarian. The traditionary account is that they were erected as monuments of a peace concluded upon their site between the Romans and the Caledonians; but there are strong reasons for presuming that they are sepulchral memorials. It was at Dunipace that Edward I. of England, on the 14th of October, 1301, signed a warrant to his ambassadors—then in France—authorising them to consent to a truce with the Scots as an indispensable preliminary towards a peace with their ally the French king, between whom and Edward a destructive war had long been waged. This parish is rich in minerals, and has an extended line of the Denny branch of railway crossing the river Carron, which divides this and the adjoining parish of Denny, extending to the mines, which give employment, with the other works, to the inhabitants of this district. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. Acreage of the parish, 5,586; population in 1881, 1,874.

BONNYBRIDGE, about 2½ miles S.E. from Denny, has risen within the last twenty years from a small hamlet to a village of considerable size and importance. Several industries have during that time been established, and have expanded into gigantic proportions. Chief among these are the foundries of Geo. Ure & Co. Limited, and Smith & Wellstood, Limited, on the banks of the Forth and Clyde canal—the former celebrated for the manufacture of light and ornamental castings, and the latter for American stoves. The other leading trades are Oswald & Hall's paper mills, five brickworks, two saw mills, two grain mills, a chemical works, &c. Bonnybridge was converted into a quoad sacra parish in 1877, at which time a very neat church was built here. It has a large public school, two public halls, post office, &c. There are two railway stations in the village—one belonging to the Caledonian, the other to the Caledonian and North British Companies jointly; and within a radius of a mile are two other stations. The population of the village is about 2,000 and of the parish about 3,000.

DENNY LOANHEAD is a straggling village, situated about two miles south of Denny, in the same parish. A chapel for United Presbyterians is in the village, and a public school. Minerals abound in the neighbourhood, and there is also a large forge for the manufacture of spades and shovels. The Forth and Clyde Canal and the Caledonian Railway pass about a mile to the south.

HAGGS is situated about one mile and a half west of Denny Loanhead, and in the parish of Denny. It contains an Established church and a handsome public Board school, erected in 1875, at a cost of about £4,000. A distillery is at the extreme west end of the parish, at BANKIER. The battle of Kilsyth was fought 15th August, 1645, in the neighbonrhood of Hollandbush, near Haggs. Population in 1881, 1,500.

DRYMEN,

BUCHANAN, GARTNESS, AND THE DISTRICT OF CROFTAMIE.

DRYMEN, a parish and village, 17 miles N.N.W. from Glasgow, 15 miles long by 10 in breadth, is bounded on the north by Aberfoyle, on the east by Kippen, Balfron and Killearn, on the south by Killearn, Kilmaronock and Dumbarton, and on the west by Buchanan and Kilmaronock. It lies on the south-eastern shore of Loch Lomond, into which, below the village, runs the river Endrick. The village contains the parish church and one for United Presbyterians. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is located in a handsome building well adapted for the purpose. Fairs for cattle are held on the last Wednesday in April (old style) and 17th May (new style). Acreage of the parish, 30,850; population in 1881, 1,431.

BUCHANAN is a parish lying on the western extremity of the county, mountainous and moorish; it is bounded by the parish of Arrochar on the north, Loch Lomond on the west, by the river Endrick on the south, and by Aberfoyle, Loch Katrine and Drymen on the east, and is about 24 miles in length by 5 in breadth. The river of Forth rises in the district at the back of Ben Lomond, and the Endrick waters intersect the parish. Buchanan Castle, the seat of His Grace the Duke of Montrose, stands on the margin of Loch Lomond, and the Fort of Inversnaid near the head of the loch. Acreage of the parish, 41,598; population in 1881, 550.

At GARTNESS, about 2½ miles from Drymen, is a fall of water of about 12 feet tumbling over a rock, which the salmon when going up the river clear by a leap. Near the village are two manufactories for woollen cloth and felting. It was here that Lord Napier of Merchiston (inventor of the logarithms) resided when he was making his calculations.

CROFTAMIE is a district containing a few houses, in the parish of Kilmaronock (Dumbartonshire), situated about a mile and a half from Drymen village; the Forth and Clyde section of the North British Railway runs through it, and the Drymen station is situated here.

FALKIRK,

BOTHKENNAR, CAMELON, CARNOCK, CARRON, CARRON SHORE, LAURIESTON, POLMONT, AND REDDING.

FALKIRK is an ancient town, and the principal town of the eastern district of the county, as it is of the parish to which it gives name. The extreme length of the parish is nine miles, and its breadth from two to five and a quarter. It is bounded on the north by Denny and Larbert, on the south by Slamannan and Muiravonside, on the east by Polmont, and on the west by Dumbartonshire. The town is 24 miles W. from Edinburgh, 22 N.E. from Glasgow, 11 S.E. from Stirling, and three from Grangemouth. It is situated on the face of an eminence, overlooking the broad expanse of country called "the Carse (or Kerse) of Falkirk," and commanding a most extensive prospect, which, for beauty of landscape, is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland. The views comprise (besides the rich and fertile "carse," which is well cultivated and interspersed with villages and several gentlemen's seats) the river Forth, with vessels passing to and from the ports of Grangemouth, Alloa, Kincardine, &c., and also up and down the great canal, which intersects the country about half a mile north of the town; while to the south it is bounded by Callendar wood, shrouding a rising ground a short distance from the town. Few situations more eligible for rendering a place handsome could have been selected. As it is, the town has a very good appearance. It consists of (excluding a number of back streets and lanes, or wynds) one principal street, which is long and irregular. In general, the houses are built of hewn stone, and the town is ornamented with a steeple 146 feet high, in which are two bells and a clock. Immediately to the west of the steeple an equestrian statue of the late Duke of Wellington was erected in 1854 by public subscription. It is of stone, and is a great ornament to the High street. In the year 1859 a commodious Exchange or Corn Market was built on the north side of the parish church; this was replaced by a new hall in 1878. The Corn Market is now held in Nelson's Auction Mart. The port of Grangemouth, situate about three miles to the north-east of Falkirk, is connected with the burgh by a railway, formed by the Caledonian Railway Company. A number of small villas are situated towards the north of the town; they form a street, about half a mile in length, uniting to the town GRAHAMSTON and BAINSFORD, and thereby forming a continuous double line upwards of a mile in extent. The town is governed by a provost, three bailies, and nine councillors. This body first came into existence in 1833, but for want of any power of raising money to carry on a municipal government, the powers of the magistrates were latent. This defect was remedied by an Act passed called the "Falkirk Police and Improvement Act," under which the magistrates assess the inhabitants for police and improvement purposes. The County buildings, erected in 1868, in lieu of the old court house, are situated in Hope street; the building includes court rooms for the sheriff and justices, procurator's hall, &c. At the same time a new prison and county police office were erected. New Burgh Buildings were erected in Newmarket street in 1878. The "bairns" of Falkirk have been long celebrated for a manly spirit of independence, both political and religious, combined with a liberality of sentiment and a sociality of intercourse seldom witnessed elsewhere.

Falkirk, as it is situate in a very populous district, with no large town in the immediate neighbourhood, commands an extensive inland trade, no market being held in the seven or eight surrounding parishes; and the various iron and other works (from which the town derives material support) render it the market town for between fifty and sixty thousand people. Under the head of manufactures we may mention, in addition to the leather trade in tanning and currying, the making of fire bricks and tiles, with a distillery, a brewery, and several chemical works. Besides the famous Carron Works, which are the oldest and most extensive in Scotland, there are the Falkirk Iron Works, the Gowan Bank Iron Works, the Grahamston Iron Company's Works, the Burnbank Iron Works, the Etna Iron Works, the Parkhouse Iron Works, Camelon Iron Works, the Callendar Iron Works, Abbots Iron Works, the Springfield Iron Works, and about a mile to the west are the Port Downie Iron Works, and the Forth and Clyde Iron Works. There are various coal mines in the vicinity, and extensive timber yards and flour mills. The Union canal joins the Forth and Clyde canal about a mile west from the town, but its trade is limited, it having been purchased by the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company. About half a mile south of the town it passes through a tunnel 796 yards in length. Falkirk was created a burgh of barony, in the reign of James I., afterwards a burgh of regality in the reign of Charles I., but no baron bailie has been appointed for many years. A body of "stent masters," chosen by the different trades of the town, formerly managed its affairs, but that body being abolished by act of Parliament, their powers and property were transferred to the magistrates. Justice of peace courts and petty sessions are held as occasion requires. A sheriff court was first opened at Falkirk in 1834, for the eastern district of the county, comprising the parishes of Falkirk, Polmont, Muiravonside, Slamannan, Larbert, Bothkennar, and Airth. A fine block of stone buildings was erected in 1876, at the north side of the High street, styled the Globe Buildings. There are five branch banks and a savings bank in the town.

The old church of Falkirk is believed to have been founded by the followers of St. Columba, and, with the church of Dunfermline, is considered to be one of the oldest Establishments on record erected on the mainland of Scotland for the exercise of public worship. The name of the town owes its origin to the church, and the Highlanders still call it by the old Celtic name of "Eglaise Bhreac," or spotted church. The former church was taken down in 1810, and a new one erected on its site, but the tower connected with the ancient structure was, however, permitted to retain its position. The Kirk Session Records mention the fact that a marble tablet, which is now inserted in the tower, was found when the old church was taken down. It bears the following inscription:—

FVNDATVM
MALCOLMO III.
REGE SCOTIÆ
A M † 1057

In the churchyard lie the bodies of Sir John de Graham (the friend of Wallace) and Sir John Stuart, who were slain on the memorable field of Falkirk, in 1298, whilst fighting for the independence of their country against Edward I. A plain coffin-shaped stone marks the grave of the latter, and the Marquis of Bute has lately erected a large granite cross in front of the church, to the memory of the men of Bute who were slain with their chief, Sir John Stuart. There is also a monument to the memory of Sir John de Grame, which has been from time to time renewed. It was surrounded a few years ago by a handsome railing, surmounted by a Gothic cupola. A bronze casting of the two-handed sword used by this hero has been affixed to the tomb. The following is a copy of the old inscription:—

Here lyes Sir John de Grame, baith wight and wise;
Ane of the chief reskewit Scotland thrise,
Ane better knight not to the world was lent;
Nor was gyde Grame, of truth and hardiment.

In the same cemetery stands the monument to two brave officers, Sir Robert Munro, of Foulis, and his brother, Dr. Munro, who fell in the second battle of Falkirk, between the forces of the Pretender, and the Duke of Cumberland, January 17th, 1746.

Various sects have places of worship in Falkirk and neighbourhood; the situation of each, with their respective officiating ministers, are given in a subsequent page. All the burial grounds being closed by order of the sheriff, a new cemetery has been provided for the entire parish; it embraces an area of eleven acres, and is situate about a mile west of the town. There are several public schools, and one or two private ones. A market for grain is held on Thursday. Seven fairs are annually held for cattle and horses, namely—the last Thursday in January, the first Thursday in March, the third Thursday in May, the second Thursday in June, the second Thursday in July, the third Thursday in August, and the first Thursday in November; besides two days for hiring servants (the first Thursday in April, and the last Thursday in October), called feeing Thursdays, which are numerously attended. The three Falkirk trysts, supposed to be the largest cattle markets in the kingdom, are held at Stenhousemuir on the second Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in August, September, and October. The population of Falkirk, including Grahamston and Bainsford, was in 1671, 11,712, and in 1881, 15, 599.

CARNOCK is a small district in the parish of St. Ninians, but in the postal delivery of Larbert.

CAMELON is a village in the parish of Falkirk, situate on the road from Stirling to Falkirk, about a mile west from the latter town, on the line of the great canal; it consists chiefly of one tolerably well-built street. There are two nail manufactories of some importance, as well as the three foundries before mentioned, and likewise a boat building yard, while about half a mile further west is an extensive paraffin oil and tar distillery. Camelon is a place of considerable interest to the antiquarian, having been represented by the early writers as a maritime city, in corroboration of which assertion fragments of anchors, blocks of stone with rings attached, and even an entire boat of ancient model, have been found embedded in the soil. The city, it is alleged, was built by Vespasian, and when subsequently possessed by the Picts had twelve brazen gates. No vestige, however, of this magnificent place remains except one portion of a wall, visible from the Glasgow road. The sea is now about four miles distant from the village.

CARRON is a village in the parish of Larbert, one mile and a half east therefrom; it is situated on the river Carron, and about a mile and a half from Falkirk. The immense ironworks of the Carron Company occupy almost the whole village. Population in 1881, 902.

CARRON SHORE is a village at the extreme north-east of Larbert, about two miles therefrom, situated partly in that parish, and partly in that of of Bothkennar, and about three miles from Falkirk. The river Carron passes the village, which contains a mission church belonging to the Establishment, a handsome United Presbyterian church, recently built, a Free Church school, and other schools. The Carron Company have numerous collieries here for supplying their works. Railways run in various directions from the works to these collieries. Population in 1881, 962.

LAURIESTON (or Lawriestoun) is a village in the parish of Falkirk, about one mile east from that town. Nail making which was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, is now almost extinct. This place was originally called Langtoun, afterwards Merchiston, and is now named Laurieston, in honour of the late Sir Lawrence Dundas, who made considerable additions to and much improved it. Population in 1881, 1,452.

The parish of BOTHKENNAR, about two miles long by an equal breadth, lies in the carse of Falkirk, and about three miles therefrom. It is a rich and fertile district, possessing some excellent orchards, and contains the parish church and school. It is bounded on the north by the parish of Airth, on the west by the parish of Larbert, on the south by the parishes of Falkirk and Polmont, and on the east by the river Forth. Coal abounds in the parish, which is got to supply the Carron Company. On the Avon, in the parish of Muiravonside, are the ruins of an old nunnery, founded by Malcolm IV. and half a mile west are the remains of the ancient castle of Almond, for several generations the favourite seat of the Earls of Callendar. Acreage of the parish, 1,774. Population in 1881, 3,271.

The parish of POLMONT is one of the richest and most beautiful districts in the county, with little exception, being arable land, finely enclosed and planted; it has the river Avon on its eastern boundary, and is intersected by the main road from Edinburgh to Falkirk, and by the Union canal on the south, and the Firth of Forth on the north. The parish, which extends five miles inland from the Forth, is about two miles in breadth, and has within its limits several coal mines, and abounds in iron and freestone. There is a large private school here, called Blairlodge, conducted on public principles, with accommodation for over 300 boarders. The school stands in its own grounds of 30 acres. The village of Polmont lies on the road to Falkirk, and from whence it is three miles and a half to the east. The small village of NETHER POLMONT is situated on the coast from Falkirk to Bo'ness, from which it is four miles distant. Acreage of the parish, 5,512. Population in 1881, 3,955; of the village, 519.

REDDING is a district situated in the parish of Polmont, abounding in coal mines, all of which are worked by the Redding Coal Company; there are two schools and a chapel for Methodists. Nobel's Explosives Co., Limited, have large works here for the manufacture of detonators for their dynamite. The company also make vitriol and other chemicals on a large scale. Population in 1881, 520.

FINTRY,

A VILLAGE in the parish of its name, is 41 miles W. from Edinburgh, 16 W.S.W. from Stirling, and 18 N. from Glasgow; bounded on the north by Balfron and Garguunock; on the east by St. Ninians and Kilsyth; on the south by Campsie; and on the west by Kilearn and Strathblane; extending from east to west 6 miles, and in breadth, from north to south, averages about 5 miles. It is pleasantly situated north of the Campsie Fells, and admirably calculated for a seat of manufactures from its healthful site and the abundant supply of water; the deficiency of coal, however, is a formidable obstacle to the establishment of works of magnitude, the nearest point from which this indispensable article can be obtained being at the distance of at least 8 miles. Both the Endrick and the Carron rivers have their source in this district, and in their course through it form several romantic falls, among which is the celebrated Loup of Fintry, a cataract of the Endrick descending 91 feet; and on the Carron is another, about 112 feet, called the "Auchinlily Linn Spout." Near the village of Fintry is a hill called the "Dun," on which is a range of perpendicular basaltic columns, some 50 feet in length; among them may be observed several without any joints; altogether they form an attractive object, and are much visited by tourists. The only place of worship is the Established church, which stands at the Clachan, nearly a mile east from the village. Acreage of the parish, 13,772. Population in 1881, 414.

POST OFFICE, FINTRY, Elizabeth Buchanan, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at 12 15 p.m. (Sunday excepted), and are despatched at 3 50 p.m.—The nearest Money Order Office is at BALFRON, a village about five miles distant.

GRANGEMOUTH

IS a busy and thriving seaport in the parish of Falkirk, 3 miles N. from that town, 27 N.N.W. from Edinburgh, and 25 N.E. from Glasgow. It is situated on the Firth of Forth, at the junction of the river Carron with the Clyde and Forth canal. The formation of this place was commenced in 1777 by Sir Lawrence Dundas, for the accommodation of the shipping passing through the canal to and from the Clyde and Glasgow, of which it is the natural eastern port. It is now a place of importance, and displays the enterprise of the British merchant in an eminent degree by its numerous and commodious quays, granaries, and warehouses for goods, and its capacious wet docks and basins for timber. It has also shipbuilding yards, a graving dock, and timber yards. Rope and sail making is extensively carried on, and there are saw mills and large collieries adjacent. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland have branches here. There are two public schools. The new Victoria Library has been erected at a cost of about £1,800, including site, which was defrayed by assessment. The wet dock, opened in 1843, affording room for nearly 20,000 tons of shipping, being found too small for the trade, additional dock accommodation was added. The growth of the port is no doubt attributable to the very moderate rate of charges, as well as to the facilities for vessels of the largest tonnage to enter the docks. The canal rates of toll are also very low, and an abundant supply of lighters is always in the port. The area of basins for timber exceeds 17 acres. New docks were opened on the 3rd of June, 1882. The ground acquired for their construction amounted to nearly sixty acres, and nineteen and a half acres of this is the water area of the new docks and timber basins, the actual dockage area being about ten and a half acres. On the same date a new park, which covers eight and a half acres, kindly granted by the Earl of Zetland, was thrown open to the inhabitants. A branch railway, which joins the North British at Falkirk, was formed in 1859, thus putting the port in connection with the railway system of the country. The Caledonian Railway Company have also a branch line, which joins the Scottish Central section at Larbert. There are large imports of timber, grain, flax, &c., from Norway, Denmark, America, Prussia, and the Baltic in general, besides a considerable coasting trade. Steamers ply regularly to and from London, Rotterdam, Hamburgh, Stettin, Dunkirk, Copenhagen, Middlesbro', &c. The advantages and cheapness of the port, and the readiness of communication by canal and railway with the populous manufacturing districts, and with inexhaustible supplies of iron and coal, combine to invest Grangemouth with unrivalled advantages for the above imports and of other continental produce, as well as for the export of the mineral and other productions of the west of Scotland. Near the canal stands Kerse House, the seat of the Earl of Zetland. There are an Established church, two Free churches, and an United Presbyterian church. A new Town Hall has recently been erected, at an estimated cost of £5,500, the large hall of which is capable of seating 900 persons. There are also included in the building town clerk's chambers, council room, and small halls for meetings of committees, &c. The population of Grangemouth in 1881 was 4,424.

KILLEARN.

KILLEARN is a village in the parish of its name, 50 miles W. from Edinburgh, 20 S.S.W. from Stirling, and nearly 17 N.W. from Glasgow, situate on the river Endrick, almost in the centre of the district, and in a pleasant part of the country. The parish is 12 miles long by an average breadth of 2½ miles, the river, with the parish of Balfron, forming its northern boundary. It is bounded on the east by Fintry, on the south by Strathblane, and on the west by Drymen. Gentlemen's seats and pleasure grounds abound throughout the parish; and these, with the surrounding highly picturesque scenery, render the aspect of the locality most agreeable. Considerable interest is also attached to this part of the country as having been the birthplace or residence of men eminent in the biography of Scotland. In its more secluded recesses Sir William Wallace was known to have occasionally found a retreat. It has an additional claim to the attention of the literary world from being indisputably the birthplace of George Buchanan, the celebrated poet and historian, whose name is deservedly famous all over Europe. He was born at a place called the Moss, a small farmhouse on the bank of the Water of Blane, about two miles from the village of Killearn; the farm was the property of the distinguished author's father, and was for a long period possessed by persons of the name of Buchanan. A beautiful monument of white freestone was erected in the village, by the gentlemen of the parish and neighbourhood, in honour of the memory of their eminently gifted countryman. It is a well-proportioned obelisk, 19 feet square at the base, and 103 feet in height above the ground. The expense of its erection was defrayed by voluntary subscription, and it has recently been renovated and enclosed by iron railings, and the ground round about improved. The village has been furnished with a supply of water by Alexander Buchanan, Esq. The church, a very handsome structure, was built by Sir Archibald Orr Ewing, M.P. of Ballikilrain, in memory of his daughter, at a cost of £8,000, and presented to the parish. The old church is now used as a public hall. The land of the parish is fertile, and is watered by the Endrick and the Blane. The minerals in the district are chiefly limestone and freestone, and beautiful specimens of jasper are occasionally met with among the fragments of basaltic columns which abound here. The woods produce great numbers of indigenous plants. Acreage of the parish, 15,370. Population in 1881, 1,131; of the village, 356.

KILSYTH,

AND THE VILLAGE OF BANTON.

KILSYTH is a considerable town and burgh in the parish of its name, 35 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 15 S. from Stirling, between 12 and 13 N. from Glasgow, nearly 12 W. by S. from Falkirk, and 4 from Cumbernauld; situated on the main road leading to the three first-named places. It is a straggling and irregularly built place; a considerable proportion of the inhabitants are employed in weaving for Glasgow houses and resident manufacturers. The parish is abundantly stocked with coal and ironstone, vast quantities of the latter being supplied to the Carron Iron Works, near Falkirk, and to Gartsherrie and Langloan, near Coatbridge. The district is about seven miles in length, and three and a half in breadth. In form the parish is an irregular oblong, bounded by St. Ninians and Fintry on the north, Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch on the south, Denny on the east, and Campsie on the west. It is watered by the Carron and Kelvin rivers; it also contains one of the reservoirs of the Forth and Clyde canal. In 1637, near the village of Kilsyth, the Covenanters, commanded by General Baillie, were defeated by Montrose. Kilsyth formerly gave the title of viscount to the unfortunate family of Livingstone, attainted in 1715 for their attachment to the house of Stuart; in the burial place of this family the bodies of the last Lady Kilsyth and her infant son lay embalmed for many years. About the middle of the parish is a hill which exhibits a fine specimen of basaltic columns. Railway communication with Glasgow was opened here in 1878, through the Blane Valley section of the North British line. Besides the parish church there are places of worship for members of the Free church, the United Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established in the town, also a Savings Bank. Fairs are held on the first Friday in April, and the third Friday in November. Acreage of the parish, 13,121. Population in 1881, 6,840; the town numbering 5,405.

BANTON and HIGH BANTON are small villages, situate about two and a half miles north-east of Kilsyth, in that parish, and about six miles south-west from Denny. A parish church is at Banton, and also a public school.

POST OFFICE, KILSYTH, Archibald Chalmers, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Glasgow) at 8 a.m. and 12 50 and 5 30 p.m., and are despatched at 9 30 a.m. and 3 15 and 5 55 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

KIPPEN,

WITH THE PARISH OF GARGUNNOCK, AND THE VILLAGE OF BUCHLYVIE.

KIPPEN is a village 10 miles W. from Stirling, situate in the eastern part of the parish of its name. The parish is 8 miles in length by from 2 to 4 in breadth, and is bounded on the north by the river Forth, on the east by Gargunnock, on the south by Balfron, and on the west by the parish of Drymen. It lies partly in the county of Stirling and partly in that of Perth, being well watered, and from some of the higher grounds an extensive and varied prospect, including Stirling Castle and the romantic woody eminences adjacent, is presented. Kippen village possesses two churches—an elegant one belonging to the Establishment, and a Free church. Near the railway station is the historically celebrated Ford of Frew, where in 1746 Prince Charles lost his cannon, while retreating before the Campbells. Mineral wells are situated in the neighbourhood. A quarry of red stone is also near the village. Fairs are held at Kippen on the second Wednesday in December, and at Balgair, a moor about two miles from Kippen, for horses, cattle and sheep on the Friday before the 26th June. Acreage of the parish, 11,256. Population in 1881, 1,500; and of the village, 330.

BUCHLYVIE is a village in the parish of Kippen, situated 5½ miles W. by S. therefrom, and contains three places of worship, a quoad sacra church belonging to the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church. A branch of the Bank of Scotland is also in the village. From PORT OF MONTEITH station the tourist may proceed to the lake of Monteith, in which are situated the islands of Inchmahome and Talla, on the former of which are the ruins of a large monastery, founded by King Egbert, in 825. Many historical associations are connected with it, among which may be mentioned that Queen Mary retired thither after the battle of Pinkie, and planted a boxwood bower, a part of which still remains. It was here that Sir Walter Scott conceived the idea of writing his "Lady of the Lake." Ardgibbon Glen, much frequented for the grandeur of the scenery, is in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held in Buchlyvie on the 26th of June and 18th of November. Population in 1881, 319.

GARGUNNOCK is a parish which extends 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth; bounded on the east and south by St. Ninians, on the west by Fintry, Balfron, and Kippen, and on the north by Kincardine and Kilmadock. As regards its agricultural features and capabilities, it is divided into two districts; one of which, on the south, is hilly and pastoral, and the other is a flat carse land which spreads from the town of Stirling, in a south-westerly direction, towards the county of Dumbarton. The chief business here is basket making, and there is also a distillery. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are in the village, which stands on the side of a hill on the south edge of the carse alluded to, about 4 miles E. from Kippen. The river Forth divides the parish from Perthshire. Acreage, 9,859; population in 1881, 698.

LARBERT,

AND THE VILLAGE OF STENHOUSEMUIR.

LARBERT, or Larbet, is a parish, the village, 3 miles from Falkirk and 8 from Stirling, being beautifully situated on the side of a hill, on the northern bank of the Carron. The parish contains some gentlemen's seats of the first class, among which is Kinnaird, once the residence and property of Bruce, celebrated for his travels in Abyssinia, who was born and died in this parish; his remains are interred in the parish churchyard, and a monument of iron, cast at Carron, is erected over his grave. At the Reformation, an ancestor of this enterprising traveller repaired the old church. The present place of worship is a handsome modern erection, with a square tower. Near this place the great Roman road or causeway passes, and about a quarter of a mile to the west the foundation of a bridge is visible when the Carron river is low. The famous Falkirk cattle tryst is held on a moor in this parish in October, when 20,000 to 30,000 head of cattle and great numbers of sheep are exposed for sale. Close to Larbert station are works of Messrs. Dobbie, Forbes & Co., Messrs. Jones & Campbell, and Messrs. Turnbull, Mathieson & Co., for the manufacture of stoves, grates, ranges, &c. The Established church is in the village, and there is a public Board school. Acreage of the parish, 3,963. Population in 1881, 6,346, and of the village, 881.

STENHOUSEMUIR is a small and neat village, situated about half a mile east of Larbert, in the same parish, and contains a Free church. A Board school has recently been erected at a cost of about £8,000. Another half mile distant is the hamlet of NORTH BROOMAGE, near which is the Scottish National Institution for the Education of Imbecile Children—a handsome building in the style of the continental ecclesiastical architecture. Here careful and skilful tuition, varied as each case demands, succeeds in imparting a useful education to and unfolding the inherent capabilities of many children of deficient intellect, on whom ordinary training would be inefficient. It is sustained partly by donation and partly by fees which are paid by the more wealthy parents. Near this institution is the Stirling District Lunatic Asylum for the counties of Stirling, Dumbarton, Linlithgow and Clackmannan. Population of Stenhousemuir, about 3,000.

POST OFFICE, LARBERT, Margaret Gillespie, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Falkirk) at 6 40 a.m. and 5 40 p.m.; and are despatched at 5 45 a.m. and 12 20, 5 and 8 20 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

POST OFFICE, STENHOUSEMUIR, Janet Walker, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive and are delivered (from Larbert) at 9 a.m. and 7 p.m.; and are despatched thereto at 7 20 a.m., and 4 10 and 7 30 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

LENNOXTOWN AND CLACHAN OF CAMPSIE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BALDERNOCK, CAMPSIE, STRATHBLANE, MILTON OF CAMPSIE, AND TORRANCE.

LENNOXTOWN (or Newtown of Campsie) is a large village in the parish of Campsie, 42 miles W. from Edinburgh, 22 S.S.W. from Stirling, and 9 N.N.W. from Glasgow, and is a station on the Blane Valley Branch of the North British Railway. In the village is the extensive calico printing establishment of Messrs. R. Dalglish, Falconer & Co. and the Hurlet & Campsie Alum Works; and in the vicinity are bleachfields and collieries. There is a comfortable hotel within one minute's walk from the railway station. A sheriff court for the recovery of small debts is held at the Lennox Arms Hotel on the last Thursday in February, May, August, and November. An Established church, with a square tower, is situated in a commanding position near the centre of the village; there are also neat places of worship belonging to the Free church, the United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. Several schools are attached to these places of worship. The parish of Campsie lies in the central part of the county, and extends eight miles in length by seven in breadth. It is bounded on the north by the parish of Fintry, by Baldernock and Strathblane on the west, on the south by Cadder and Kirkintilloch, and on the east by Kilsyth. It is composed of a fertile strath or valley, bounded by ranges of the Campsie hills or fells on the north, which are elevated about 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. The Clachan, or town of Campsie, as it is designated, is distant rather more than a mile from Lennoxtown, and stands on the low grounds at the foot of the far-famed Campsie glen, which from its romantic scenery and waterfalls is a place of great resort in the summer. The district is the residence of several persons of distinction, and ornamented by some elegant seats; those of Woodhead, Craigbarnet and Glorat are perhaps the most conspicuous. The rivers Kelvin and Glazart pass through this parish, which is intersected by the two great roads from Kippen to Glasgow, and from the later city to Edinburgh. Population in 1881, 3,249.

The small village of TORRANCE, in the parish of Campsie, or, as it is generally called, the Torrance of Campsie, is about 3¼ miles from Lennoxtown, on the direct road to Glasgow, and has a station on the Kelvin Valley line of railway.

BALDERNOCK, a parish (anciently Bathernock) is situated in the southern extremity of the county. It is bounded by the river Kelvin and Allander on the side fronting north-east, and by Campsie; and on the south-west lies the loch of Baldowie. The parish abounds with cairns and similar memorials of early warfare. The most remarkable of its antiquities is a structure denominated "the auld wife's lift;" it consists of three stones, two of which are laid on the earth close by the side of each other, and on the top of this the third is placed, in the same direction, with their ends pointed to the north and south; the whole are 18 feet in length by 11 in breadth and 7 in depth. In the surrounding grounds the roots and stumps of oak trees have been dug up, and there can be no doubt of this spot having once been a Druidic grove and place of sacrifice. Acreage of the parish, 4,322; population in 1881, 569.

STRATHBLANE parish, as its name implies, composes the vale of the river Blane, which pursues a north-western course through it; the land of the valley is exceedingly fertile, and is embellished by several neat villas, while the hills are clothed with natural woods. The parish lies in the south-west corner of the county, and is bounded on the east by the parish of Campsie; on the south by Baldernock and East Kilpatrick; and on the west and north by Killearn. The village of Strathblane is 3½ miles west from the Clachan of Campsie, and 5 east from Killearn. There are the extensive calico printing works of the Blanefield Printing Company, situated in the valley. About one mile to the west are the ruins of Duntreath Castle, and two miles south-east are the ruins of Mugdock Castle, the property of the Duke of Montrose. Acreage, 9,068; population in 1881, 1,343.

MILTON (or Milton of Campsie, as it is generally called) is a small village situated two miles east of Lennoxtown, in the parish of Campsie. There are two printworks in the neighbourhood. The village contains an Established Church, recently erected, and a public school, and there is a station on the Campsie branch railway Population in 1881, 555.

ST. NINIANS AND BANNOCKBURN,

WITH CAMBUSBARRON, EAST PLEAN, AND WHINS OF MILTON.

ST. NINIANS is a considerable village in the parish of its name, now incorporated with Stirling, about one mile from Stirling, situate on the road from that town to Glasgow. The form of the parish is irregular in extent, but may be computed at about ten miles from east to west, and about six miles from north to south, bounded on the east by the parish of Airth, on the south by Larbert, Dunipace, and Denny, on the west by Fintry and Gargunnock, on the north by the river Forth, which separates it from Kincardine, Lecropt, Logie and Ailoa (if a small space occupied by the parish of Stirling be excepted). It derives its name from the patron saint of the ancient parish church, the steeple of which still remains, and is a distinguished curiosity. The church to which this fabric was formerly attached being used as a powder magazine by the Highlanders in 1746, was accidentally blown up immediately before their retreat to the north. Though scarcely one stone of the body of the church was left upon another, the steeple remained unmjured. The town consists of one long and rather narrow street, the houses of which are curious and old-fashioned; upon many are dates of considerable antiquity, and some of them have stones upon which various characters and implements are rudely and grotesquely carved. The dwellings, however, are for the most part whitewashed, which imparts a lively appearance to the place; and well-cultivated grounds and thriving plantations abound in the vicinity. The places of worship are an Established, a Free, and United Presbyterian churches. There is also a Board school. St. Ninians has long been famed for the manufacture of nails; other staples are the tanning of leather and the manufacture of screw bolts. Acreage of the parish, 88,012; population in 1881, 10,423.

BANNOCKBURN is a prosperous manufacturing village in the parish of St. Ninians, one mile from that place, situate on both sides, but chiefly on the east bank, of the Bannockburn rivulet, which here runs through a glen, and after a course of a few miles falls into the Forth. Few places of its size in Scotland have more rapidly improved of late years, in consequence of the manufactures that have taken their seat here: these consist of tweeds, tartans and carpets to a considerable extent. Coal is obtained in the vicinity in great abundance, and a tannery has been established in the village for a long period. In this district the country is characterised by long descending braes, with a northern exposure to the Firth of Forth, and it was on one of these uplands, between this village and that of St. Ninians that was fought, on the 24th of June, 1314, the memorable and decisive battle of Bannockburn, the result of which was the permanent security of the independence of Scotland. In this conflict the army of the English was defeated with a loss of thirty thousand men and seven hundred knights. Bruce's forces were stationed along the front of an eminence called Gillies Hill, and extended from south-west to north-east, between the farm of Greysteil and the village of St. Ninians. About half a mile south from the latter, upon the summit of a commanding elevation called Calden Hill, is a large stone, termed the "Bored Stone," having a hole in the top in which the Scottish king inserted his standard on the day of battle. The height called the Cat Craig Hill, from which the English king watched the progress of the battle, has been almost quarried away. About half a mile from the village of Bannockburn, at MILTON, is pointed out the remains of the miller's house to which James III. retreated from the battle of Sauchieburn, fought in 1488, about two miles further to the south-west. The places of worship are the Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. There are two schools in the village, one being under the Board and the other an endowed school. There has recently been erected a large public hall, at a cost of £1,700. Two fairs are held in Bannockburn—on the second Tuesday in June and October (old style). Bannockburn, with MUIR, continued in 1871 a population of 2,564, and in 1881, 4,331.

CAMBUSBARRON is a village in the parish of St. Ninians, situate one mile north-west from that place, and about the same distance west from Stirling. Extensive woollen mills, belonging to Messrs. R. Smith and Son, give employment to the majority of the inhabitants. In the immediate neighbourhood there are also extensive limekilns. There is a Free church here, and Board schools were erected in 1875, at a cost of £4,000. Population returned with the parish.

About three miles from Bannockburn is the village of EAST PLEAN, containing a hospital for the accommodation of old and indigent men, more especially soldiers and sailors. Colonel Francis Simpson, of East Plean, who died in 1831, was the donor, having bequeathed upwards of £30,000 and an estate for the purpose. The establishment contains forty-eight inmates, who are fed, clothed, and have a small allowance of pocket money; the trustees granted the land on which a church has been erected in connection with the Church of Scotland.

SLAMANNAN WITH AVONBRIDGE.

SLAMANNAN is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Avon, extending along the margin of that stream for about five miles, and is from three to four in breadth. The village, which contains a branch of the Bank of Scotland, is seven miles S. from Falkirk. There is a station close to the place on a branch of the North British line. On the southern boundary of the district is a small lake called Black Loch, which is a tributary to the great reservoir for the Forth and Clyde Canal. Near the north-west end of the parish there is a point where the three shires of Stirling, Dumbarton and Lanark meet, and at the south-west end the shires of Stirling and Lanark meet with that of Linlithgow. The whole neighbourhood abounds in collieries, but the surface is composed principally of bog, moss, &c. There are a few dairy farms in the parish. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the Wesleyans. There is a school here under the management of the School Board, and one belonging to the Free Church. Acreage of the parish 7,062; population in 1881, 5,850, the village containing 1,644 of that number.

AVONBRIDGE is a small village partly in the parish of Slamannan and partly in that of Muiravonside, four miles from Slamannan and about seven S.E. from Falkirk. It contains two places of worship, one belonging to the Evangelistic Union, and the other to the United Presbyterians. There is a Board school here, which is managed by the combined boards of Slamannan and Muiravonside. The station, which is on the Slamannan branch of the North British line, is close to the village. Population and acreage returned with Slamannan.

STIRLING,

CAMBUSKENNETH, NEWHOUSE, CAUSEWAYHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STIRLING is an ancient town, the capital of the county and parish of its name, and a royal and parliamentary burgh; 35 miles W. by N. from Edinburgh, 28 N. by E. from Glasgow, 33½ S.W. from Perth, 11 N.W. from Falkirk, 7 W. from Alloa, and 6 S. from Dunblane. Like the old town of Edinburgh, Stirling is situated on the sloping ridge of a rock, the precipitous end of which, towards the west, is occupied by the castle. The prospects from hence are most delightful and extensive; towards the east, especially, they are enhanced by the windings of the Forth, the ruins of the Abbey of Cambuskenneth, the tower of which has been renovated and ornamented at great expense, the Abbey Craig, with Wallace's monument on the summit, and the city of Edinburgh in the distance. While the situation of Stirling is thus one of the most pleasing and picturesque in the country, it is a place noted for its antiquities and the historical associations connected with them. The origin of the name of Stirling is surrounded by great uncertainty. In all the old records it is entitled Stryveline or Stryveling, a word of obscure etymology, which has been modified into Sterling and Stirling—the latter its now accepted appellation. The town standing as it does on the declivity of a hill, the streets are in general clean; the principal devoted to business being King street, Port street Murray place, Barnton street, and Baker street. As was the case with Edinburgh, Stirling arose as a suburb in contiguity with the castle. The latter stands on a basaltic rock, and around it is a pleasant walk, carried from the town, in many places cut out of the solid rock; from this walk are several very interesting views, and it affords an excellent opportunity for examining the basaltic pillars of which the rock is composed. On the south side of the castle is a flat enclosed piece of ground, called the "Valley;" it was the spot where tournaments were held, and on one side is a place where the ladies used to sit to witness the feats of valour of the combatants, which is still designated the "ladies' rock." This piece of ground is now tastefully laid out as a cemetery, and is quite in keeping with the beautiful scenery by which it is environed; it contains several handsome monuments, chiefly to the martyrs of the Reformation. On the low ground immediately below this rock is situated the "King's garden," a moderate-sized field, completely surrounded by a canal, now filled up; in the midst of which is a curious artificial mound of octagonal form called the "King's knot," which appears to have been a miniature of a regularly fortified place, but which tradition recognises as the scene of some forgotten play or recreation, which the king, with his court, was accustomed to enjoy here. The palace, within the castle walls, is a stately structure, externally in the form of a square, and very richly and curiously ornamented with grotesque figures standing upon pillars or pedestals, in good preservation. For several centuries Stirling Castle was little else than a single tower; at the end of the 11th century it rose into consequence, and in the course of the succeeding century it attained the distinction of being one of the four principal fortresses in the kingdom. Such it continued during the sanguinary and protracted contest which Edward I. of England waged for the subjugation of Scotland, when it was frequently taken and re-taken, after tedious sieges, and under circumstances which prove its great strength and importance at that period. In the course of that eventful struggle between independence and usurpation, Stirling and its vicinity formed the theatre of some of the most brilliant achievements of Sir William Wallace; of these none were so remarkable as the battle of Stirling, fought on the 13th of September, 1297, in which the English army was signally defeated with great slaughter, and the eventful battle of Bannockburn, fought by Robert the Bruce, on the 24th of June, 1314. Stirling Castle first became a favourite residence of royalty about the reign of James I., whose son, James II., was born in it. In the reign of Queen Anne the fortifications of the castle were considerably extended; and it is declared in the articles of treaty of union with England to be one of the four fortresses in Scotland which were ever after to be kept in repair. Since that period it has experienced little change in external aspect, except being gradually rendered more and more a modern barracks for the accommodation of soldiers. It is commanded by a lieutenant-colonel, and has a chaplain and a barrack master, who is likewise storekeeper. Perhaps one of the most interesting places in the castle is a room in the west building of the quadrangle, known as the "Douglas Room," so called from being the apartment in which William, eighth earl of Douglas, was killed by a dagger by the hand of King James II. On the evening of the 18th of November, 1855, it was almost destroyed by fire, but since it has been as nearly as possible restored to its original appearance.

Stirling as a royal burgh is one of high antiquity, having received its charter from Alexander I. in 1119. It is governed by a provost, who is also high sheriff, the only provost in Scotland holding this important office, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and 14 councillors, who are elected according to the terms of the Scottish Burgh Reform Act, which has also enlarged the limits of the burgh in so far as the parliamentary elective franchise is concerned, and for that purpose it comprehends St. Ninians and other small villages and hamlets. The burgh, in conjunction with Culross, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline, returns one member to Parliament. The present representative is the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman. Being the county town, the courts of the sheriff are held here, and are attended by a number of procurators resident in the place. The chief manufactures of Stirling are carpets, tartans, tweeds, winceys and shawls, for which it has been long noted, and these branches engage a considerable number of weavers. The other leading avocations are tanning, ironfounding and agricultural implement making, a large wool factory, two coach building establishments, and two perambulator manufactories. There are seven banking establishments settled here. They are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Co. Bank, besides a National Security Savings Bank. The principal hotels are the Golden Lion in King street, the Royal Hotel in Barnton street, Dowdy's Temperance Hotel, Hendry's Station Hotel and the Douglas Hotel in Murray place, and the Star in Baker street—all combining comfort and economy with strict attention to the wants of visitors. Some shipping trade is carried on, and during the summer river steamers from Leith afford a cheap, expeditious and agreeable communication with Edinburgh.

There has sprung up in Southfield and Spittal's Park, the property of Spittal's Hospital, what may be called the west end of the town. A large area is covered with beautiful urban villas, squares and crescents, and these all being in the immediate neighbourhood of the King's park, render them very pleasant places of residence. The approaches to the town, on every side, are truly grand, and probably equalled by few and excelled by none in Scotland. Large sums have been expended on the main streets—and to good purpose—for few towns are better paved, or lighted with purer gas, than Stirling. It is also well supplied with excellent water, brought to the town from a distance of about three miles; so that Stirling is perhaps one of the most pleasant towns for residence, as well as one of the most beautiful, in the kingdom. The old Town House, which stands in Broad street, has a tower, with a clock and a set of musical chimes. Behind it is the gaol. New County Court houses have been built in Viewfield Place, in a substantial and elegant style, opposite to which is a handsome granite fountain, erected in honour of her Majesty's jubilee. At the top of King street is the Athenæum, an edifice with a fine lofty spire and a clock which has four dials; the ground flat is occupied as shops, and the upper flat contains the council chambers and town clerk's offices; the front of the building is circular, thus giving a much greater facility of entrance to the two streets which branch out here. The Smith Institute, in Dumbarton road, erected in 1873, is a stone building, with portico front; it was founded by the late Thomas S. Smith, Esq., of Glassingall, at a cost of £5,000, who also left sufficient funds for its future maintenance; the town gave the site. The building embraces a reading room, library, museum and picture gallery, all of which are open to the public free, the provost and others being appointed trustees. The Stirling Tract Depot, erected at a cost of nearly £5,000, is situated in Dumbarton road; it forms a prominent feature from the style of architecture, which is a combination of modern Italian, with some of the more picturesque features of early Norman. The windows of the ground storey are crowned with heads, sculptured in stone, of Luther, Wycliffe, Knox, Guthrie, Whitfield and Chalmers. The Corn Exchange, situated near the Athenæum, a large structure used as market place, was formerly the principal hall for public meetings, concerts, &c. In 1882, the Arcade, a glass roofed thoroughfare between Murray place and King street, was built. It contains the Douglas Hotel, a number of shops, and two halls, the Town Hall, seated for 1,100, and licensed for stage plays, and the Lesser Arcade Hall for smaller meetings. In 1883 a splendid new public hall was erected in Albert place by the Stirling Public Halls Company, Limited. This handsome building, designed by Mr. William Simpson, jun. architect, Stirling, cost about £12,000, and contains a large hall, fitted with ample stage accommodation for dramatic performances, for which there is a license, and seated for 1,400 persons; and a smaller hall, seated for 300, with retiring and cloak rooms and keeper's apartments. The large hall contains a magnificent organ, built by Willis, London, at a cost of £2,300.

There are four Established churches, four Free, three United Presbyterian and one Episcopal, and chapels for Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational and Roman Catholic sects. The East and West congregations of the Establishment worship in Greyfriars, a fine old building near the Castle. The North church, in the Norman style of architecture, is situated in Murray place, where also is the Free North church, with a fine spire. Holy Trinity church, in Albert place, is another neat edifice, with a beautiful organ. A monument, in the Grecian style of architecture, was erected at a cost of upwards of £500, in front of the United Presbyterian church, St. John street, in memory of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine, one of the first seceders from the Establishment. In 1856, a poor house, hospital and lunatic asylum were erected at a cost of £7,000. Stirling has long been celebrated for its schools and hospitals; some of the latter are foundations of long standing, and are well endowed—their titles and localities will be found under their appropriate heads at a subsequent page. Several newspapers are issued from the press of this town every week, namely, the Stirling Observer, the Stirling Journal and Advertiser, and Bridge of Allan Reporter. They are papers of considerable repute, and deservedly enjoy a large share of patronage. Stirling, long the seat of Scottish kings and the classic site of the most interesting scenes in Scottish history, is now the peaceful centre of the richest and best cultivated district in Scotland.

Three miles from Stirling are the mineral springs of AIRTHREY, the chief saline waters in Scotland, containing 47½ grains of common salt in 16oz., and nearly a similar amount of muriate of lime. They are situated at Bridge of Allan, now a large and thriving village, containing many elegant mansions and villas, and which will be found noticed on a preceding page. On the 24th of November, 1877, a monument to King Robert the Bruce, occupying a commanding position in front of Stirling Castle and overlooking the battlefields of Stirling and Bannockburn, was unveiled by Lady Alexander. A weekly market is held at Stirling on Friday. The fairs are held on the first Friday in February, for horses; the last Friday in May, for cattle and horses; the first Friday in March, April, May, and August, for cattle; the third Friday in October and the second Friday in December, for hiring servants. According to the returns for 1871, the town of Stirling contained a population of 14,272, which in 1881 had increased to 16,012.

CAMBUSKENNETH is a small village in the parish of Logie, county of Clackmannan, situated opposite to Stirling, on the north side of the river Forth, on one of the peninsulas formed by the windings of the river, near to which is the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth Abbey, founded by David I., in 1147, and once a pile of great magnitude. Within the precincts of the abbey James III. and his queen were interred. During some excavations made among the ruins the royal remains were discovered, and were afterwards re-interred, and a beautiful tombstone, erected at the expense of her Majesty, marks the spot.

CAUSEWAYHEAD is a small village in the parish of Logie, about midway between Bridge of Allan and Stirling, situated in the counties of Stirling and Clackmannan, and at the foot of Abbey Craig—a detached portion of the Ochil range—which presents a precipitous front of about 560 feet above the level of the Forth. On its most elevated ridge, and almost perpendicularly over the village, stands Wallace's monument. It is in the form of a Scotch baronial tower, surmounted by a crown, and is 220 feet in height. The foundation stone was laid June 24th, 1861 (the anniversary of the Battle of Bannockburn), with masonic honours, by the Duke of Athole. From the summit, which is reached by a spiral stair, the view is rich in natural beauty and historic associations. Population in 1881, 370.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE.

THIS is a Highland county, and one of the most northerly districts in Scotland. Its form presents five sides, that on the east being bounded by Caithness-shire for about thirty-seven miles, that on the south and south-west by Ross-shire, that on the south and south-east, for a distance of thirty-three miles, by the Moray Firth, and its sides on the west and north are washed by the Atlantic and the North Sea. It has an area of 2,027 square miles, or 1,298,459 acres, exclusive of 47,633 acres of water, 12,812 of foreshore, and 1,553 of tidal water. A small portion only of the shire is under cultivation. In size it ranks as the fifth, and in population as the twenty-eight of the counties of Scotland.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—This large county consists almost entirely of an uninterrupted succession of wild mountains, valleys and morasses. The northern and western coasts are bold and rocky, deeply indented by inlets of the sea and bays, and variegated by imposing promontories, among which latter Cape Wrath, at the north-western corner, is most prominent. The shire comprehends the political districts of Strathnaver (anciently a county of itself), Assynt and Sutherland, the first-named including the northern part, and the two latter the southern. The interior is divided naturally into three districts—the Eastern, the Middle and the Western. The first is a level narrow strip of land on the east coast, sheltered from the north by a ridge of mountains from three hundred to eight hundred feet high; the second is occupied by the four straths of the rivers Helmsdale, Brora, Fleet and Oykel; and the western district, which borders on the Atlantic, is still more wild and mountainous, abounding in salt and fresh water lochs. The mountains of greatest altitude in the shire are Ben More, 3,235, Ben Clebrig, 3,157, and Ben Hope, 3 040 feet above the level of the sea. The large extent of Sutherlandshire was the last district in Scotland which was subjected to the improvements of modern times. Until about the close of the last century, it was a country lying in nearly the same condition as it must have exhibited centuries before, and, in many respects, was shut out from the progress of that civilisation which had been so beneficially spread over the rest of Britain. The great barrier which impeded improvement was the dangerous narrow firths to be crossed, and the total destitution of roads, either along the shore or into the interior. Two powerfully-moving circumstances at length brought about the introduction of efficient measures of improvement. The first was the extraordinary and patriotic exertions made by the noble family of Sutherland and Stafford, and the second was the well judged liberality of Parliament, which agreed to advance a moiety of the expense to be incurred for certain roads and bridges in the Highlands. When it was proposed to place turnpike gates on the principal line the noble proprietor said, "It will shut out the thoroughfare of passengers, of which we have too few; and, regarding the tenantry, I see no benefit in lowering rent with one hand, while with the other I impose tolls upon them." Thus, under the fostering care of the first and succeeding Dukes of Sutherland, as well as that of the late Duchess-Countess, the aspect of the county has been most agreeably changed. Breeding of sheep is the great staple business of the shire, for which its sheltered straths and finely swelling green hills, as well as its climate (which is superior to that of Caithness-shire), eminently adapt it. Under the various improvements of store farming the county rears 200,000 sheep, mostly of the Cheviot breed, of which 20,000 are annually exported, besides about 80,000 fleeces of wool. From the fishing stations on the coast the county annually exports from 30,000 to 40,000 barrels of herrings, besides cod, ling, &c. Nor is the business of tillage neglected. The agriculture of the shire in some parts is now equal to that of the Lothians, and the soil, being of a sandy, open-bottomed nature bears excellent crops of barley, turnips, and clover. Oats are also grown, and wheat is occasionally raised, but only with moderate success. The exports of farm produce, &c., have been much assisted by the erection of piers at Helmsdale and other places on the coast, chiefly at the cost of the Duke of Sutherland. The building of houses has been greatly facilitated by the abundance of sandstone, limestone, and slate found in different parts of the county. Coal has for many years been wrought at Brora. This county is almost devoid of manufactures, the only works being at Brora and Rogart, at which places tweeds, blankets, &c., are made. Hand looms are, however, still worked in many of the crofters' houses. The principal rivers are the Brora, Borgie, Naver, Helmsdale, Halladale, Laxford, Inchard, Inver, Shin, Fleet, Strathmore and Gruke. The only line which gives to this county railway communication is that belonging to the Highland Railway Company.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Sutherlandshire comprises thirteen parishes and part of one other. It contains only one town, Dornoch, which is a royal and parliamentary burgh, joining with Kirkwall, Wick, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty in returning one member, and the county at large sends another. The member at present sitting for the county is Angus Sutherland, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 numbered 2,713. The Duke of Sutherland, K.G., is the Lord Lieutenant. The population in 1871 amounted to 24,317—11,408 males and 12,909 females; in 1881 the number returned was 23,370; viz. 11,217 males and 12,153 females, a decrease of 947. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £93,012.

DORNOCH,

CLASHMORE, EMBO, AND BONAR BRIDGE IN CREICH.

DORNOCH is a small town and royal burgh the capital of its parish, and of the county of Sutherland, nine miles N. from Tain and 11 S. from Golspie, healthfully and pleasantly situated near the mouth of the river Portmaculter, now generally called the Firth of Dornoch, and opposite to Tain, which lies on the south side of the estuary. Dornoch is an ancient place, and was the residence of the bishops of Caithness even before the 12th century. The cathedral church was then erected here by Bishop Gilbert Moray; but in the year 1570, some hostile tribes of the neighbouring country took advantage of the minority of Alexander, Earl of Sutherland, made a sudden irruption into the town, and among other barbourous acts, set fire to the venerable edifice, after a desperate resistance by the inhabitants, who succeeded, however, in preserving the old tower that still remains. On the 5th of November, 1605 (the day of the discovery of the gunpowder plot), a range of handsome stone pillars which supported some Gothic arches that had escaped destruction were prostrated by a violent gale of wind. In 1614 the Earl of Sutherland commenced the repair of a part of the cathedral, and subsequent alterations converted it into an ordinary plain church; but during the year 1836, the late Duchess-Countess of Sutherland restored the structure to its original dimensions and Gothic proportions; and now, with its projecting abutments and arched windows (all carefully copied from the r maining fragment of the edifice), and adorned with Gothic groinings along the lofty and long roof of the aisles, the Dornoch cathedral is the handsomest erection of its kind in the north of Scotland The remains of the late Duke of Sutherland repose in the east aisle, where is placed a beautiful marble statue of that deeply lamented nobleman, executed by Chantrey, also a tablet to the late Duchess. A small part of the bishop's palace still remains; but all the manses of the other dignitaries of the cathedral have disappeared, and the town has lost much of its comparative importance since the triumph of the Reformation.

Dornoch was constituted a royal burgh by Charles I. in 1628; and is governed by a provost, to bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, with six councillors. In connection with certain other burghs before named, it enjoys parlimentary represenation. The trade of the town is very limited, owing chiefly to its locality at an angle of the country, and the free navigation of the Firth being obstructed by the same bar of dangerous sandbanks mentioned in the account of Tain. Of late years some extensive buildings have been erected, regular and neat; two of these are very handsome, one contains the town and county room, sheriff clerk's room, &c.; the other the volunteer armoury (formerly the town and county gaol), and also a very neat police station for the county. There is a public school. The neighbourhood of Dornoch is very pleasant, and a short distance hence are some good sea bathing stations. Within four miles, situate on the rising ground, is the neat and picturesque castle of Skibo, erected by the late Duke of Sutherland, as a home farm and a rural retreat during the residence of His Grace in the north; it is now in the tenancy of its former manager, Mr. T. Barclay. The scenery about here is diversified, and combines the home grounds laid out with the best taste, and surrounded by distant spots alternately romantic and beautifully picturesque, with wood and water, hill and dale. The Links have for centuries been famous for golfing, and, as this game is increasing in popular esteem, Dornoch is becoming a resort for golfers. A neat golf house has recently been erected on the Links. There are two public fairs or markets held annually in the town, on the first Thursday in November, and the other on the first Wednesday in December. These fairs were formerly wont to be thronged by persons from distant parts of the country; but now in consequence of the rise of small villages in different places, and the establishment of cattle markets elsewhere, these fairs are but thinly attended. In 1881 the parish of Dornoch, which covers an area of 30,189 acres, contained a population of 2,525; of this number the burgh had 497.

CLASHMORE is a modern and thriving village, about 3 miles W. from Dornoch, situated partly on the estate of Sutherland and partly on that of Skibo, being divided only by a small burn which separates these properties, and by the parliamentary road to Caithness, which passes through the village. A neat and comfortable inn—the Sutherland Arms—affords every accommodation required by visitors. It was erected some years since by the late Duchess-Countess of Sutherland, at an expense of about £1,000. Within half a mile from the village is the beautiful seat and residence of Evan Charles Sutherland, Esq., of Skibo; on the site of this mansion there formerly, for centuries, stood a castle, with a garrison, under the charge of a general officer as governor. Around it many bloody conflicts took place, but its retention having become unnecessary in these peaceful times, it was demolished, and the present castle of modern architecture erected instead. The celebrated, noble, and brave, but ill-fated Marquis of Montrose, in the year 1650, lodged two nights as a prisoner in the Castle of Skibo, after his unfortunate defeat by the Presbyterian army near Bonar Bridge, and his subsequent capture by the avaricious and treacherous Neil Macleod, of Assynt, who basely betrayed and delivered him up to his enemies. An extensive fair is held on the first Monday of May, at Clashmore. Population included with that of Dornoch.

BONAR BRIDGE is a considerable thriving village in the parish of Creich, 15 miles N.W. from Tain, and 13 W. from Dornoch, situate on the great north mail road, and on the north side of the Firth of Dornoch, which is here crossed by an elegant iron bridge, erected by Government at a cost of £13,971. Here are two hotels, a branch of the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited, a large public school, a drill hall, and several substantial houses and shops. Fairs are held in the village on the second Monday in April, June, July, August, September and October. Population in 1881, 319.

EMBO, a fishing village and life-boat station, is 2 miles N.E. from Dornoch. Population about 400.

GOLSPIE,

BRORA, KILDONAN, HELMSDALE, ROGART, CLYNE, AND LOTH.

GOLSPIE is a parish and village—the latter neat and respectable—11 miles N. from Dornoch, and 20 N. from Tain, pleasantly situated on the east coast of the county. Before the commencement of the present century, Golspie was principally inhabited by fishermen, but it is now the most important and prosperous village in the shire. The great parliamentary road passes through it, and it is a station on the Highland railway, which connects it with Inverness. A branch of the Town and County Bank, Limited, and another of the British Linen Company, are established here. A convenient pier, accessible at low water, constructed in the safe harbour of the little ferry three miles and a half distant, is a valuable improvement to the village and its neighbourhood. The parish church, a small but convenient building, erected in 1619, and kept in good repair, stands within a well enclosed burial ground, surrounded by thriving trees; and at the west end of the village the Free church is situated; schools are in connection with both these places of worship. Golspie owes its increasing prosperity to its eligible situation in the centre of the arable district, and to the direct communication established between it and the distant west and north coasts. The vicinage of Golspie is peculiarly distinguished and adorned by Dunrobin Castle, the chief and princely seat of the Duke of Sutherland, situated within a mile of the village. The castle is known to have existed in the twelfth century, and, according to old historians, it was even long before that period the family fortalice of the ancient Thanes and Earls of Sutherland. Of its ancient appearance it has almost become divested, and given place to a particularly chaste and characteristic style of architecture. The principal entrance is through a long avenue of trees, terminating which the noble building bursts upon the sight. The view from the castle's summit is remarkably fine, and comprises all that give effect to a delightful landscape, including the tastefully laid out gardens and grounds, the finely-wooded burn and waterfall in Dunrobin Glen, and the picturesque mountain of Ben-Bhraggie, towering over all to the height of thirteen hundred feet. Upon the summit of this eminence has been placed a lofty monument to the memory of the late Duke of Sutherland. The interior of the castle is no less to be admired than the beauties that surround it; and the works of art with which it is decorated are various and costly, the paintings especially being of the first merit; while the apartments altogether are magnificent in their furniture and dimensions. The view from the sea likewise possesses great interest. The building from this point is seen to great advantage, exhibiting its noble tiers of balconies, and numerous spires, its windows of stained glass, its gardens and beautiful fountains, &c. Near the village a handsome memorial has been erected to the late Duchess, raised by subscription, to perpetuate the remembrance of the many virtues of that noble lady. Acreage of the parish 19,960. Population in 1881, 1,556; of the village, 956.

BRORA is a village in the parish of CLYNE, about 12 miles S.S.W. from Helmsdale and 6 N.N.E. from Golspie. Its trade is of a domestic nature; the curing of fish employs some of the inhabitants, and there is a distillery in the neighbourhood. The parish is large, being twenty-four miles in length by from four to eight in breadth, extending inland to Strathbog, through which flows a tributary to the Brora water, a narrow and rapid stream, abounding with excellent salmon. Within the last few years great improvements have been made in this district by His Grace the Duke of Sutherland. Coal has been found, and is at present worked to a considerable extent, and bricks and tiles are made here. The parish of Clyne has an area of 74,504 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,812, of which Brora possessed 532.

HELMSDALE is a modern village in the parish of KILDONAN, 60 miles S. by W. from Wick, and 17 N.N.E. from Golspie; situated at the mouth of the river from which it takes its name, and on the coast road that passes northward. The houses are substantial, the streets are regular, and its harbour is excellent; during the season for the herring fishery large fleets of boats resort here. The places for curing are the most complete and the best adapted on the coast for pursuing this branch to a great extent. The river that flows through the extensive strath of Kildonan abounds with salmon. Just opposite the town stand the ruins of an old castle, which serve as a landmark to mariners. The places of worship are two churches, one of the Establishment, the other a Free church. There is a public school, also one for young ladies. A branch of the British Linen Company Bank is established here. The parish of Kildonan, which covers an area of 134,550 acres, in 1881 had a population of 1,942, of which 675 belonged to Helmsdale.

LOTH is a parish on Dornoch Firth, 10 miles N.E. of Brora, about 11 miles in length. The last person who suffered death for reputed witchcraft was burnt here about 1720. A public school and an Established church are in the village. Acreage of the parish, 17,331; population in 1881, 584.

ROGART is a parish on the Dornoch Firth, 10 miles W. from Golspie. The inhabitants, with the exception of a few employed at the woollen manufactory, are principally of the labouring class. There are an Established and a Free church in the parish, and three public schools. Acreage, 66,267; population in 1881, 1,227.

WIGTOWNSHIRE.

THIS county, which forms the western part of the ancient district of Galloway, occupies the south-western extremity of Scotland. It is bounded on the east by the stewartry of Kirkcudbright (or Eastern Galloway), also by Wigtown Bay; on the south and west it is girded by the Irish Sea, and on the north by the county of Ayr. The extent of the shire from north to south is about thirty miles, and (including Luce Bay) its breadth from east to west about the same. The superficial contents of the county (adopting a medium calculation betwixt conflicting authorities) may be taken at 480 square miles, of which about one-half, perhaps, is cultivated. The Bay of Luce indents the land to the extent of 15 miles, and forms two promontories. At the southern extremity of the western projection is the Mull of Galloway, while the apex on the eastern is called Burrow Head. These two peninsular headlands are also known by the Celtic name of the Rhinns (Rhyns or Rhynos) of Galloway. On the north of the county another promontory is formed by the intersection of Loch Ryan. In ordinary language the district is divided into Upper and Lower Galloway, which designates the northern or higher, and the southern or lower parts of the shire. Wigtownshire stands the seventeenth in point of size and the twenty-second in population of Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman power obtruding itself into North Britain, the ancient British tribes of the Novantes inhabited the whole of Western Galloway, having Leucophibia (the modern Whithorn) for their principal town, and Rerigonium (Loch Ryan) for their principal port. The Anglo-Saxons overran the district in the sixth century, and Oswie, the Northumbrian king, settled at Whithorn. During the ninth or tenth centuries the country on the west was inhabited by the Picts from Ireland and the Isle of Man, and hence the name of Galloway, or "the country of the Gael," was conferred on the territory. About the twelfth century Galloway passed into the hands of the Scottish king Alexander II. In the sanguinary combats which originated in the competition of Bruce and Baliol, the chieftains of Galloway long remained attached to the party of the latter, whose family they sheltered after Edward Bruce had subdued the whole country. The family of Douglas subsequently became possessed of the lordship of Galloway; but, on the attainder of the nobleman of that name in 1455, the title became extinct. It was revived, however, and now bestows an earldom on the distinguished family of Stewart and Garlies. The Maxwells of Nithsdale received a portion of the estates. The proximity to Ireland and the Isle of Man caused the country of the Gael to remain for a long period a separate community from the rest of Scotland, and the Gaelic dress, manners and language lingered here long after they fell into disuetude in the rest of the Lowlands. Whilst these distinctions remained, the inhabitants were conspicuous for rudeness bordering on ferocity. Their chief derived his authority sometimes from the kings of Scotland and at others from the kings of Northumbria, but neither could subdue the turbulence and insubordination of the chieftain and his vassals, who were very troublesome neighbours, making reckless incursions into the territories of those who had the misfortune to dwell in the proximity of those half-civilized marauders.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—This shire is one of the most level districts in Scotland; and the hills, of which there are none of great altitude, are generally pretty free from the encumbrance of rocks. The best lands lie near the shores, the inland division being more elevated, and largely mixed with heath and moss. The major part of the soil is of that kind sometimes called a dry loam, though it often inclines to a gravelly nature. The county presents an exposure to the south, and its waters mostly descend to the Irish Sea. The climate is moist, with winds from the south-west, which prevail during the greater part of the year, usually accompanied with rains; yet, when proper attention is exercised by the agriculturist, the moisture of the climate is but seldom injurious to the products of the earth. Snow rarely lies long, and frosts are not generally severe or of tedious duration. In early times this district of Galloway, like most other sections of the country, was covered with woods; and in modern days planting has been pursued most extensively. The salutary improvements that have been effected in this county have been, with some justice, ascribed to the efforts of the Agricultural Society of Dumfries. The spirit and practice of husbandry gradually spread from that shire to Kirkcudbright, and, thence from Ayrshire, penetrated into Wigtownshire. Since that period rents have risen rapidly, and corn and other products of tillage, black cattle, wool, sheep and swine are now largely exported. This district has long been pre-eminent as being an excellent pastoral one, and for the superiority of its wool. The mineral resources of the county are by no means extensive. There is no coal, at least not for any useful purpose; and although there is plenty of iron ore, the absence of the former article renders the latter of comparatively little value. In the northern part of the Rhinns the existence of sandstone has been ascertained. Quarries of slate, of different qualities, are found in various places, and lead mines were formerly wrought within the district. The shipping trade of Wigtownshire has felt, like all maritime counties, the impetus of steam navigation. The ports of Stranraer, Wigtown, and Whithorn derive considerable benefit from this mighty power; and at one time Portpatrick was the station for the mail steam packets communicating with Ireland; the removal of which to Glasgow and Greenock has been a severe blow to the prosperity of this interesting little port. The coasting trade of the county is considerable, and is steadily increasing, giving employment to a large number of mariners. In 1688 the number of boats belonging to this shire was four, while at the present time they may be numbered by hundreds. There is also considerable activity in the fisheries connected with the numerous ports and lochs. There is an almost entire absence of manufactures in this shire, if we except mills at Kirkcowan and Mannigaff, at which blankets, tweeds, &c. are made. The great industry of Wigtownshire is, however, the manufacture of cheese by the farmers of the Rhinns district of the county, who have been for many years the principal prize takers for the celebrated Cheddar cheese made by them.

RIVERS AND MOUNTAINS.—This county has no considerable rivers; the principal are the Cree, the Bladnoch, and the Tarf, with a few of smaller size. The Cree, which is a boundary river between this county and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, rises in Carrick, in Ayrshire; after forming a lake at the head of Wigtownshire, it flows again as a stream, and, passing Newton Stewart on the east, falls into a creek at the head of Wigtown Bay. The Bladnoch also has its source in Carrick, and, after running a course of twenty-four miles, falls into Wigtown Bay. The Tarf issues from a small lake in Ayrshire, and, after a course of twenty-one miles, unites with the Bladnoch. The mountains, with their elevations above the level of the sea, are—Lang, 1,758 feet; Mochrum Fell, 1,020 feet; Knock of Luce, 1,014 feet; and Barhullion, 814 feet. The Caledonian Railway offers extensive facilities for communication with other important towns and counties.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Wigtownshire comprehends seventeen parishes, and has three royal burghs, namely, Wigtown, Stranraer, and Whithorn. Prior to the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, these three last-mentioned towns, in conjunction with New Galloway, returned one member to Parliament; but on the passing of that bill the representation was merged in the counties. The county sends one representative, the gentleman now sitting being Sir Henry Eustace Maxwell, Bart. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-9 numbered 5,743. The Earl of Stair, K.T. is Lord Lieutenant of the county. The burghs of barony in the shire are Newton Stewart, Garlieston, Kirkcowan, Glenluce, and Portpatrick; it has several thriving villages, and a number of small seaports or natural harbours, and is ornamented by many handsome mansions and elegant seats of its nobility and gentry. In 1871 the population was returned as 17,879 males and 20,951 females; total, 38,830. In 1881 the figures given were:—Males, 18,143; females, 20,468; total, 38,611; which shows a decrease of 219. The valuation of the county for 1888-9 is (exclusive of railways, £4,099) £207,330.

GARLIESTON AND SORBIE.

GARLIESTON is a sea-port village in the parish of Sorbie, finely situated at the head of Garlieston bay (a small haven on the west side of Wigtown bay). From the pier-head the Ross light bears S.E. by E. For distance—See Sorbie. The place is built in the form of a semicircle, facing the sea, with a safe and commodious harbour, capable of receiving a large number of vessels; the tide at the spring flow rises eighteen feet. Regular steam communication is maintained between this port and Liverpool once a fortnight, and there are traders occasionally. The Broughton and Poutonburn streams, which here flow into the bay, are crossed by several bridges. Galloway House, a fine mansion, the seat of the Earl of Galloway, erected in 1740, is adjacent on the south, and at present occupied by Henry T. Broadhurst, Esq., on short lease; it is surrounded by beautiful plantations, and the grounds about it, for several miles, are extremely picturesque, and the prospects on every side delightful. Garlieston is a station on the Port Patrick and Wigtownshire Joint railway. Population in 1881, 690.

SORBIE (or Sorby) is a parish and village—the latter 39 miles E. from Portpatrick 30 S.E. from Stranraer, 13 S. from Newton-Stewart, and 6 S. from Wigtown; situated in a fine part of the county, and surrounded by land in a high state of cultivation. The parish is of an irregular figure, extending along the shore about twelve miles, and varying in breadth from two to six miles inland. The chief bays in the parish are Garlieston and Rigg, with the ports of Allan's Whaple, and Innerwell; these bays and ports are very convenient for shipping, and well adapted for the prosecution of the fisheries. The headlands are Cruggleton and Eagerness; upon these are the remains of two strong castles, one of which, Cruggleton Castle, gives the name to the promontory. It is believed to have been built by the Danes and Norwegians in 1098, and shortly afterwards fell into the possession of the Kerlies, or M'Kerlies, who retained possession until the Reformation. Previously they owned Carolton, now Carleton Castle, near Girvan, which the Cathcarts obtained in 1824. Cruggleton Castle is celebrated for one of the successful exploits of Sir William Wallace, the great Scottish patriot. It was taken by treachery, and Sir William retook it for his friend William Kerlie, who was thereby restored to his patrimonial castle and territory. This is fully mentioned in Paterson's "Wallace and Times." Eagerness was also built by the Danes, but no particular account has been handed down. About a mile to the east of the kirk are the gradually mouldering outlines of Sorbie tower, formerly belonging to the Hannay family. The Port Patrick and Wigtownshire Joint railway runs close by the village. The Free church, opened in 1877, is a fine Gothic structure, cruciform in shape, with tower and spire rising to a height of over 60 feet, and was erected at a cost of about £2,500. It is situate at Millisle, about one mile from Garlieston, and two from Sorbie. Sorbie belonged to a family called Sorby, now changed to Sorbie. The Hannays did not get it until a much later period. Sorbie parish, which embraces an area of 9,611 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 1,696.

GLENLUCE AND NEW LUCE.

GLENLUCE is a village in the parish of Old Luce, 19 miles E. by N. from Portpatrick, 18 W. from Wigtown, 16 S.W. from Newton Stewart, and 10 E. by S. from Stranraer; situated on the banks of the river Luce, and on the public road, at the head of Luce Bay, which here forms a tolerably good harbour for small vessels. The country around is interesting and picturesque, and abounds with game of almost every kind. The church is a neat edifice, remarkable only for its simplicity; there is also a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians, and Board schools. About a mile to the north of the church, further up the vale (from which the village takes its name), are the ruins of Luce Abbey, founded by Rolland, Lord of Galloway, in 1190. When in its perfect state it must have been an extensive building. The vast mass of prostrate fragments at present cover about an acre and a half of ground, notwithstanding the quantities that have been carried away. The only part now remaining entire is a small apartment on the east side of the square, within which latter stood the cloisters; in the middle of this apartment stands a pillar, about fourteen feet high, from which eight arches spring, this is the Chapter House. Tradition reports Michael Scott, of cabalistic memory, to have been at one time abbot of this establishment, and adds that his magical library still exists under a particular part of the ruins; to ascertain which a person excavated part of the ground and found many curiosities, together with several skeletons in an upright position; the explorer, however, having been seized with insanity, further search was interrupted, and the superstitions of the people prevented the others from pursuing the investigation. In the Collections of the Ayrshire and Galloway Archæological Association, Vol. V. a full description is given of the Abbey, with plans. It is the seventh in the order of foundation of Cistercian abbeys in Scotland. The total length was about 180 feet. The district is full of interest for archæologists. The Rev. George Wilson has procured for the Museum of Antiquities, in Edinburgh, above 6,000 worked flints and many articles of the stone and bronze ages. There are also a number of clay urns; and some intresting stone crosses. The Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint line runs through the town, and is joined by the Girvan line at Dunragit station. The principal hotel is the King's Arms. There is a monthly fair or market held here (for cattle) from the first Friday in the month of April to the first Friday in December. Acreage of the parish, 31,596. Population in 1881, 2417; of the village, 901.

The village of NEW LUCE is 5 miles N. from Glenluce, situated on the Luce, where the Cross water falls into that river. This district, which, until the year 1646 formed part of the parish of Old Luce, extends about ten miles in length by from five to six in breadth. It consists of high and low ground; of the former, the greater proportion is covered by rocks or heath; the arable land, which is not of great extent, lies principally on the banks of the rivers. The Standing stones of Laggangarn have been taken in charge by the Government authorities for the conservation of ancient monuments. The parish church, a plain building, and a Free church are the places of worship; there is also a Board school. This is a station on the Girvan and Portpatrick Junction railway. New Luce parish, which embraces 28,877 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 706.

IS a parish and village, the latter 10 miles N.E. from Glenluce, 8 N.W. from Wigtown, and 7 S.E. from Newton Stewart, situated on the Tarf water, near its junction with the Bladnoch. There are woollen manufactories adjoining the village, belonging respectively to Messrs. William Armstrong and Son and Mr. William Milroy, which furnish employment to many of the inhabitants. The Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Joint Railway passes within a quarter of a mile of the village. The principal hotel is the Commercial. The church, which is a very neat edifice, was erected in 1838; its site, as well as the ground occupied by the churchyard, was given by the late Captain W. C. Hamilton, of Craiglaw. There is a church for the United Presbyterians, and Board schools. The surface of this district is various, consisting of moorland, interspersed with pieces of arable land. It extends from north to south 15 miles, by a general breadth of about 5, and is well watered by the Tarf and Bladnoch streams. Acreage of the parish, 35,835; population in 1881, 1,307; of which 671 were returned for the village.

KIRKMAIDEN, DRUMMORE, STONEYKIRK,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of KIRKMAIDEN occupies nearly the whole of the western limb or peninsula of Wigtownshire, projecting into the mouth of the Solway Firth, and tapering to a point that inclines to the east. This parish, which comprehends the most southerly district of Scotland, is about 12 miles in length and from 1½ to 3 miles in breadth; it still has a wild appearance, but produces good crops of corn and potatoes, and has a very large number of dairy farms. The coast is generally bold, and indented by caves scooped out by the endless operations of the sea, and particularly by its furious lashings against the opposing barrier in stormy weather; on both sides of the peninsula, however, there are several good anchoring grounds. At Portnissock is a harbour, now in ruins, constructed at the expense of the late Andrew M'Douall, Esq., then proprietor, who exerted himself to improve this locality. There is also a tolerable harbour at Drummore; here the coast guard have a station under the command of a chief boatman of the royal navy. Salmon and cod fishing is carried on at Drummore. The church, a plain edifice, is situate near the centre of the parish, not far from Drummore bay, 6 miles from the Mull of Galloway, 35 S.W. from Wigtown, 86 S.W. from Newton Stewart, 20 S.E. from Stranraer, and 116 S.E. from Portpatrick. On the estate of James M'Douall, Esq., of Logan, is a fish pond well worthy the inspection of visitors; it is hewn out of the solid rock, and has communication with the sea by means of an ingeniously contrived iron grating; some of the fish in this artificial reservoir have been rendered so tame that they will feed from the hand. The parish of Kirkmaiden, which embraces 13,730 acres, in 1881, contained a population of 2,400.

The parish of STONEYKIRK (more properly Steven's Kirk) lies in the western peninsula of the county, to the north of Kirkmaiden, 6 miles S.E. from Stranraer, and about the same distance E. from Portpatrick. On the east and south-east is the bay of Luce. The parish, which extends about 7 miles in length by from 3 to 5 in breadth, comprehends the three old parishes of Stoneykirk, Clackshant and Toskerton. The surface is generally hilly, moorish, and of a pastoral character; the low grounds are arable, and in some places planted. On the estate of Mrs. Matilda Maitland, in this district, is an artificial mound, supposed to be of Roman origin, and used as a beacon in time of war; there is likewise another of a similar kind on the estate of the late Sir John M'Taggart, of Ardwell House. The parish of Stoneykirk contains 19,180 acres; population in 1881, 2,766.

NEWTON STEWART,

AND THE PARISHES OF PENNINGHAM, MINNIGAFF, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEWTON STEWART is a thriving town and burgh of barony, 121 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 82 S. from Glasgow, 52 W. from Dumfries, 26 W. from Stranraer, and 8 N. from Wigtown; situated on the high road from Dumfries to Portpatrick, on the right bank of the river Cree, in the parish of Penningham, with a small portion on the opposite side of the stream in the parish of Minigaff. It is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire railway, and is also the junction for the Wigtownshire railway to Garlieston and Whithorn. The town owes its origin to a younger branch of the Stewarts, Earls of Galloway, who possessed the estate of Castle-Stewart, and founded the village upon it, to which he gave the name of Newton Stewart. About the year 1778 the estate fell into the hands of William Douglas, Esq., of Carlingwark, who founded the town of Castle-Douglas, when it was created a burgh of barony, under the title of Newton-Douglas, but it subsequently resumed its original name. About thirty years ago the houses consisted but of one storey, and were covered with thatch, but the greater portion are now two storeys in height, and slated. The town is principally composed of one large street, in the centre of which is the Town House. The Cree is crossed by a very handsome bridge of five arches, connecting the two divisions of the town. The government of the town is vested in nine commissioners elected by the ratepayers. The cotton manufacture was formerly carried on here and in the neighbourhood to some extent, but it is now completely extinct. The staple at present is wool, furnished from the surrounding country, and mostly supplied to the Yorkshire markets.

The places of worship are the Established church, which is considered to be the most elegant modern ecclesiastical structure in the south of Scotland, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Douglas Academy, founded by Samuel Douglas, Esq., of Jamaica, and the Ewart Institute, founded by James and John Ewart, merchants, of this district, are richly endowed educational establishments. A Gothic monument to Randolph, ninth Earl of Galloway, was erected in 1875, at a cost of £1,000. An institution called the Industrial Home has been founded by a few benevolent ladies, for the support of about forty destitute and orphan girls. There is a Mechanics' Institute in the town in a very flourishing condition; it is liberally supported by the gentry of the neighbourhood, the newsroom being supplied with the leading newspapers and periodicals, and is open to the public every evening; the library contains about 1,000 volumes. One of the finest buildings in the south of Scotland is the M'Millan Hall, opened in 1885, and erected at a cost of £5,000, left for that purpose by the family from which the hall derives its name, and who formerly carried on business in Newton Stewart. It is a handsome structure in the Italian style, and is imposingly situated in the centre of the town. The British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, have each a branch in this thriving town. The three principal hotels are the Galloway Arms, the Grapes, and the Crown. Agricultural improvement has been carried on to a great and beneficial extent in this district. At the upper extremity of that part of the town in Minnigaff parish there is a large moat hill, where David Graham, brother to Claverhouse, and superior of this district prior to the Revolution, administered justice. About three miles to the north of the town are the remains of Castle-Stewart, formerly belonging (as before stated) to a branch of the Galloway family, but now in possession of Mrs. Edward Heron Maxwell-Blair, of Penningham. New works were in 1882 completed for providing the town with water by gravitation, the source of supply being the Coldstream Burn, about four miles distant. About half way between the intake at the burn and the town a tank and filter have been constructed, the former having a capacity of 100,000 gallons. The water is conveyed in 5-inch cast-iron pipes, and distributed in pipes varying from 5 to 2 inches in diameter. The cost of the works was upwards of £4,000. The weekly market is held on Friday; cattle markets are held on the second Friday in every month, and the annual hiring fairs are held on the second Friday in April and October, and the Lorse fairs in February, June, and November. According to the returns for 1881, the population of Newton Stewart was 3,070.

The parish of PENNINGHAM (or Penninghame) extends along the right bank of the river Cree for about fifteen miles, by a breadth of from three to five; bounded by Wigtown on the south, and Kirkcowan on the west. The north of the town district is moorish and uncultivated, and chiefly adapted to pasture, Acreage, 33,438; population in 1881, 3,940.

MINNIGAFF is a large parish in the western part of the stewartry of Kircudbright, bounded on the west by the Cree, over which is a bridge (before noticed) forming the communication with the parish of Penningham and the town of Newton Stewart. The parish is 17 miles in length and 11 in breadth. In the lower parts the land has been a good deal improved, especially towards the margin of the Cree, which stream being navigable for several miles, has been of much benefit to agriculture. This river likewise produces excellent fish of various kinds, and abundance of salmon. The major portion of the parish is devoted to agriculture, and sustains large flocks of sheep and numerous herds of black cattle. Messrs. R. and W. Callander, timber merchants and saw mill proprietors have extensive works here, and employ a large number of workpeople. There are two places of worship—one each of the Established and Free churches. Within a mile of Newton Stewart, but in the parish of Minnigaff, is Kirroughtree, beautifully situated on the side of a hill, surrounded by fine woods, and intersected by tasteful serpentine walks. A romantic grotto in the grounds is formed out of an old stone quarry, and is well worth inspection. Acreage of the parish, 88,130; population in 1881, 1,587.

PORTPATRICK

IS a parish and seaport town, the latter 133 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 89 s.s.w. from Glasgow, between 34 and 35 w. from Wigtown, the same distance w. by s. from Newton Stewart, and rather more than 7 s. by w. from Stranraer; it is distant from Dublin 117 miles, from Belfast 36, and from Donaghadee 21 (19 nautical) miles. It is situated on the coast of the North Channel, and was for about 200 years the great thoroughfare from the north of Ireland, being the nearest port of Great Britain to that country, and the best place of crossing from one kingdom to the other. The town is small, but its situation delightful, having a fine southern exposure, backed by a ridge of small hills, and is a great resort for visitors during the summer months on account of the salubrity of its climate. It was formerly, with the estate of Dunskey, the property of Lord Montgomery, whose residence was the old castle of Dunskey, which stands in the neighbourhood, on the brink of a tremendous precipice overhanging the sea, and was once a building of considerable strength, as appears from its interesting remains. The late Sir James Hunter-Blair subsequently became possessed of the castle, and it is to the exertion of that gentleman that the town and harbour are indebted for many improvements. The quay, on which is a lighthouse, was at one time one of the finest in Britain, but is now almost in ruins. Many years ago extensive and important improvements were made at the harbour, under the auspices of the Government and direction of Sir John Rennie, for the accommodation of Her Majesty's packets, and a new basin of about 200 feet square, which is connected with the harbour by means of a channel, containing ten feet of water at low tides, was constructed. The mail communication between this place and Ireland, however, ceased in the year 1849, and since that date the business of this locality has been diminished to a great extent. This place has railway communication with all parts of Great Britain. The town is also a lifeboat and rocket apparatus station. The places of worship are the parish church, and one belonging to the Free church. The first-named is a neat edifice, with an embattled tower, and is a conspicuous as well as an ornamental object; the latter, erected in 1888, is a handsome building in the Gothic style. There is also a good Board school. Acreage of the parish, 9,094; population in 1881, 1,285; of the town, 691.

PORT WILLIAM AND MOCHRUM.

PORT WILLIAM is a prosperous village in the parish of MOCHRUM, 24 miles N.E. from Stranraer, 15 S.S E. from Glenluce, and 9 W. from Whithorn, situated on the bay of Luce. The harbour, though not of great extent, is commodious and safe, and from it large quantities of grain and potatoes are exported to Glasgow, Liverpool, and other ports on the West coast of England. In the vicinity is Monreith, the handsome residence and demesne of Sir Herbert E. Maxwell, Bart., M.P., proprietor of the place. The mansion, which stands on the bank of a fine lake, commands an extensive prospect of the bay of Luce, the shore of Galloway, the Isle of Man, and the coast of Cumberland. Near it is an old castle, surrounded by lofty trees, and contiguous are the remains of the old parish church, now occupied as a place of sepulture by the family of Maxwell, whose ancestors formerly possessed the estate. The houses in general are very well built, and afford excellent accommodation for families and tourists during the bathing season. The principal hotel is the Monreith Arms. The places of worship are a church each of the Free and United Presbyterians. There are also commodious Board schools. Population in 1881, 755.

The parish of MOCHRUM is about 10 miles in length, and extends inland between 4 and 5 miles. The Castle, or "Old Place," of Mochrum, surrounded by lakes, is a very ancient and picturesque building, in an inland part of the parish. It was formerly the family seat of the Dunbars, knights of Mochrum, but has for many years been the property of the Marquis of Bute, who has made alterations at considerable expense. The village of Mochrum, which is about a mile and a half from Port William, contains nothing worthy of mention, except the parish church and a Board school. Acreage of the parish, 24,071; population in 1881, 2,815.

STRANRAER,

WITH THE PARISHES OF INCH, KIRKCOLM, LESWALT, CAIRNRYAN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STRANRAER (or Stranrawer) is a thriving, respectable, and ancient town, a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, as well as a parish, 81 miles S.S.W. from Glasgow, nearly 10 W. from Glenluce, and rather more than 8 N.E. from Portpatrick, eligibly situated at the inner extremity of Loch Ryan. The principal street is of great length, but the houses have not been erected on the most regular plan. In the centre of the town stands a building, originally a castle, of considerable antiquity, but the date of its foundation has not been satisfactorily ascertained. It is mentioned in a charter granted by James VI., and is called the "Tower fortalice, and manor place of Chapell," and was once the residence of the family of Kennedy, of Chapel and Chrychan. The Tower, or Castle, as it is now termed, was used by Graham of Claverhouse as his headquarters in the district during the Covenanting period. In the year 1614 it was inhabited by John Kennedy, of Grennan, and Elizabeth his wife, then Lady Auchtriloor. The lands of Auchtriloor are immediately contiguous to the burgh of Stranraer, and are now the property of the Earl of Stair. Many new buildings have within the last few years been erected, of a very handsome and substantial character. Among them may be mentioned the County Buildings, in Lewis street, opened in 1874, and containing court house, town hall, and offices for the procurator fiscal, sheriff clerk, and police; the establishments of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited; the Clydesdale Bank, Limited; the British Linen Company, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. A Reformatory, now under Government control, was opened in 1855. Wood turning, bookbinding, and the manufacture of netting, twine and paper bags are carried on successfully in the institution, beside the making up of clothing and shoes for the requirements of the inmates. The old Town Hall, in George street, is now used as an armoury and drill hall for the volunteers. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday in every month, a burgh court occasionally on Saturday, and the sheriff of the county holds a court weekly, and a small debt court fortnightly.

As a royal burgh, the town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and fourteen councillors. The bay of Stranraer affords excellent anchorage—as the motto on the burgh arms implies (Tutissima Statio)—and the harbour is now large and commodious, consisting of west pier, east pier, and breastwork, affording excellent accommodation to all classes of vessels. The east pier is connected with the railway by a harbour branch, by which cattle, goods and passengers are conveyed direct from the steamers. There is eighteen feet of water at high tide at the east pier, and vessels of 1,100 tons burthen can discharge there. The depth of water in the loch, which is sheltered from all winds, is such as to allow a fleet of men of war to ride at anchor with perfect safety. It was at Cairnryan that the Prince of Wales first landed on Scottish soil. The bay at one time afforded a splendid supply of oysters, the right of fishing for which belongs exclusively, by ancient charter, to Sir William Wallace, of Loch Ryan. This fishing employed upwards of 100 fishermen for eight months in the year, and the quality of the oysters was so fine that the men could earn good wages, and pay for the privilege of fishing about £800 a year. The beds have latterly become impoverished, thus rendering the fishery unprofitable. There are, however, several kinds of white fish caught abundantly, and occasionally herrings are got equal in quality to the best obtained on any other part of the Scottish coast. The sea bathing is excellent, and the loch is beautifully situated for villas. There is a coast guard station here, and a custom house. Stranraer is peculiar from the absence of any large manufactories or works, though there are several small ones, the product of which is exclusively confined to the district; there is also a brewery, and mills, through which large quantities of grain pass every year. It is particularly noticeable for the extensive nurseries on all sides of the town, which afford employment to many of the inhabitants. The district is agricultural; grain, cheese, and all kinds of farm produce and cattle being conveyed to Glasgow regularly by railway, and once a week by steamer. A steamer runs daily between Stranraer and Larne in connection with railways on either side. The principal inns are the King's Arms, Meikle's Hotel, the George, the Albion, and the Royal.

The Established church, in Church street, is a very handsome structure, in the pointed style of architecture, the front lofty, and surmounted with pinnacles. The interior is capacious, with galleries and a commanding pulpit, and the whole has an aspect of chaste neatness. The second church connected with the Establishment is situated at the western extremity of the town, on a lofty eminence, and with its tower is a conspicuous landmark from the loch. This church was called by the late eminent Scottish divine, Dr. Chalmers, when on a visit "the visible church," from its commanding appearance from all sides. There are other places of worship for various denominations, inclusive of two Free churches. The cemetery, beautifully situated above the town, presents a fine view of the loch; it is very tastefully laid out, and contains some handsome monuments. Numerous seats, adorned with all the charms of nature and art, ornament the neighbourhood of Stranraer. Loch Inch Castle, the residence of the Earl of Stair, is three miles distant, and Castle Kennedy, in the vicinity, the property of the same nobleman, is surrounded with delightful and picturesque scenery. The Earl of Stair throws open to the public the grounds of the latter every Wednesday and Saturday. The collection of auricarias is one of the attractions of the place to all lovers of arboriculture, and it is said to be the finest collection in Great Britain. The following, situate in the vicinity of the burgh, are also worthy of notice: Lochnaw Castle, the residence of Sir Andrew Agnew, Bart.; Corswall House, J. Carrick Moore, Esq.; Loch Ryan House, Sir W. T. F. A. Wallace; Logan, James M'Douall, Esq.; Rephad, Thomas C. Greig, Esq.; and Balgreggan, Mrs. Maitland. The market is held on Friday. The following are the annual fairs:—For horses, the first Monday in January, the Thursday before the 29th of June, and the Monday before the second Thursday in October; for cattle, on the third Friday in every month, commencing in April and ending in November. Other fairs for general business are also held in May and August. The population of Stranraer, according to the census for 1871, was 5,977, and in 1881, 6,415.

The parish of INCH lies on the shore of Loch Ryan, extending nine miles in length by a breadth nearly as great. The parish church stands on the margin of a lake, in which there is a small beautifully wooded island. The lake is nearly divided by a neck of land, on which are the ruins of a castle, formerly the seat of the Kennedys, a powerful family in the neighbourhood, in the days of the border raids. Acreage, 30,844. Population in 1881, 3,766.

KIRKCOLM parish is bounded by Loch Ryan on the east, measuring a square of about five miles. The church is pleasantly situated near the shore of the lake, north of the bay called the Wig. Acreage, 18,318. Population in 1881, 1,847.

The parish of LESWALT lies betwixt the Irish Channel on the west, and Loch Ryan on the east. It is about the same size and of much the same form as Kirkcolm. The surface of this district is most agreeably varied with hill and dale, while from the sea the coast presents bold and rocky features. Acreage, 12,523. Population in 1881, 2,635.

CAIRNRYAN is a small village on the eastern margin of Loch Ryan, 6 miles N.N.E. from Stranraer. The harbour affords safe anchorage for vessels which frequently take refuge here, and there is a lofty lighthouse for their guidance. Sir William T. F. A. Wallace has a residence here.

WHITHORN,

WITH THE ISLE OF WHITHORN AND PARISH OF GLASSERTON.

WHITHORN, or Whithern, is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh, in the parish of Whithorn, 40 miles E. by S. from Portpatrick, 32 S.E. from Stranraer, 19 S. from Newton Stewart and 11 S. from Wigtown; situated not far distant from Wigtown bay. It was originally inhabited by a tribe of Britons called the Novantes, and was then a town of some consequence; it was mentioned by Ptolemy under the name of Leucophibia, the Saxons called it Hwitocrn, and from the latter the appellation Whithern is derived. St. Ninian built a church here in the fourth century, which Bede mentions as the first that was erected of stone. During the eighth century it was the seat of the bishops of Candida Casa, and it formed the episcopal capital of a bishopric of Galloway in the twelfth century. After the period of the Reformation, however, it is seldom mentioned in public transactions, and seems to have sunk into obscurity. The town consists chiefly of one street running from north to south, with several others diverging from it. From successive kings Whithorn received various charters constituting it a burgh of barony; it is now a royal burgh, but the period when it attained that distinction does not appear. It is governed by a provost, two bailies and six councillors. The Town Hall (opened in 1885) is a plain but substantially-built structure, erected at a cost of £1,100, obtained by public subscription, and will accommodate about 500 persons. Whithorn has facilities of railway communication by means of the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Joint line. The local trade is very inconsiderable, and merely of a retail and domestic character. There are two banking establishments, branches respectively of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, one each for United and Reformed Presbyterians, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish church is remarkably neat as well as spacious, and much superior to most of the parish kirks in this county; it is erected partly on the venerable ruins of the priory founded by St. Ninian, before mentioned, and who is said to have been the first who converted the Picts to the Christian faith. These ruins are remarkably grand and imposing. They contain several large vaults, some beautiful Saxon and Gothic arches, and dilapidated sculptured armorial bearings of Scotland, the bishops of Galloway, and the Coultharts of Coulthart. The inhabitants support a subscription library and a Bible Society, and there are Board schools in the town. A cattle market is held on the second Thursday in each month from April to December, and an annual fair in July. The acreage of the parish is 11,891; the population in 1881 was 2,929, and of the town, 1,653.

The ISLE OF WHITHORN is a pleasant village, about 3 miles S.E. from Whithorn, of which it is the port. Near the village stand the remains of an old church, said to be the first built in this part of the kingdom, or as some affirm, the first founded in Scotland, and its preservation is desirable from its venerable age and interesting origin. The village contains a Free church and Board schools. Population in 1881, 352.

The parish of GLASSERTON lies on the east coast of Luce Bay, bounded by Whithorn on the east, Mochrum on the west, and Kirkinner on the north; it extends seven miles and a half in length, by a general breadth of two and a half, except in its northern part, where it is nearly double that space. On the coast near its north-western confines is Lag Point, with a small haven, called Monreith Bay; a village at its head is termed the MILLTOWN OF MONREITH. The church and Board schools are in the southern and northern quarters of the parish. Acreage, 13,284; population in 1881, 1,203.

WIGTOWN,

AND THE PARISH OF KIRKINNER, WHAUPHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WIGTOWN is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the county, 105 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 58 S.W. from Dumfries, 28 E. by S. from Stranraer, and 8 S. from Newton Stewart, pleasantly situated on an eminence near the north side of the Bladnoch water, two miles from its junction with the Cree, or Bay of Wigtown. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having come into existence during the Middle Ages, from the erection of a castle on the spot by a band of successful Saxon invaders, who conferred on it the name of Wig, from the place having been contested in a battle, the adjunct ton, or "town," was afterwards given when the town arose. The castle of Wigtown subsequently became a royal residence, but the town itself does not appear to have been conspicuous till the reign of David II., when it gave the title of earl to the family of Fleming. The Wigtownshire railway connects the town with the rest of Scotland and with England. The principal street is a parallelogram, of which the internal space is enclosed by a wall and iron railings, and the centre laid out in walks and a bowling green, forming an agreeable promenade for the inhabitants. At the end is a very handsome modern cross of granite, sculptured in an elegant and tasteful manner. At the other extremity are the County Buildings, having a tower of considerable height, which imparts a degree of dignity to the town. The buildings contain the court room, the sheriff's small debt court and the ordinary courts, which latter are held every Tuesday in time of session. A monument has been erected here in memory of Margaret Wilson and Margaret M'Lachlan, the martyrs who perished in the Bladnoch Water, in the year 1685. It is situated on the top of Windyhill, from which there is a magnificent view of the town and the surrounding country, and was constructed by public subscription at a cost of £200. Many new buildings have been erected, some of them of a very tasteful and costly description, such as the new County Buildings, the Board schools, the gaol and the banks; the latter are branches of the British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. The principal inns are the Galloway Arms and the Commercial. The burgh altogether may be considered in an improving condition. The harbour of Wigtown is safe, and has a depth of water for vessels of three hundred tons burthen. Wigtown is the seat of a custom house, comprehending the creeks of Wigtown-shire and those of the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, from the Mull of Galloway to the mouth of the river Fleet. In the year 1581 Wigtown was specified as one of the King's Free Burghs. It is, as a royal burgh, governed by a provost, two bailies, and fifteen councillors.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. The parish of Wigtown extends five miles in length by four in breadth. It has several eminences throughout, but is in general flat and fertile. At the western extremity of the parish are nineteen large granite stones, placed in a circular form. They are supposed to have belonged to a Druidical place of worship or sacrifice, while tradition points to the spot as the tomb of King Galdus. The market, entitled by charter to be holden on Saturday, is now discontinued. Fairs are also chartered to be held at Candlemas, on the first Monday in April and the first Fridays in July and August, all old style, but they are discontinued. A monthly cattle market, on the fourth Friday of each month during the season, has been established, and there is an annual cattle show in July, which is numerously attended. The parish of Wigtown contains 7,805 acres, and in 1881 the population was 2,195, the town numbering 1,725.

The kirk town of KIRKINNER is about 3 miles S. from Wigtown, on the road to Garlieston, and is remarkable for its beautiful and picturesque scenery. The principal ornament in this neighbourhood is the stately mansion of R. Vans Agnew, Esq. Here are also the remains of the ancient castle of Baldoon, formerly a residence of the Dunbars, an incident in which family is supposed to have served as the foundation of the story of the "Bride of Lammermoor." The parish extends three miles along Wigtown Bay, the Bladnoch Water dividing it on the north from Wigtown. An Established church and Board school are in the village. The ruins of Longcastle church (the parish now incorporated with Kirkinner) stand at the southern extremity of the parish. Kirkinner is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint railway. Acreage of the parish, 15,250. Population in 1881, 1,597.

WHAUPHILL is a small village in the parish of Kirkinner, about 5 miles from Wigtown, and is a station on the Port Patrick and Wigtownshire joint railway.
